21st Amendment
Your name is Kerrie (unusually spelled); my name is Jamie. We met at the 21st Amendment April 3. You're blond with great blue eyes and your friend's name is Jean from South Carolina. I asked for your number and then somehow lost it in my phone! When I realized, I went back to the bar but you were already gone from my life forever ... unless this works. Write me!

Nice Arms
Where did you go?! I hope you still remember, but a while back one sunny morning, I got on the T at St. Mary's to go to work. I stopped you before you got off at Park Street and said you have really nice arms (because you do). I mentioned how you must work out a lot. You said that you used to be a gymnast. You're petite with long brown hair, and I was so flustered that I never got your name. I've been looking for you everywhere, and would love to find you and take you out to a nice dinner to learn more about you. So, this is my last resort. Will you e-mail me if you see this?

John Roxy
I met you at the Roxy March 8. You bought my drinks and we hung out/made out all night. I gave you my number before taking off, but you haven't called. I'm hoping you lost it or have been super-busy. If that's the case, I'd still love to hear from you—from what I remember, you're the most hilarious and attractive guy I've met in a while, and it's pretty rare that I can't get someone off my mind. I've been to the Roxy once since, hoping to run into you, but I didn't see you there. If you happen to read this, you should write me.

MJ O'Connor's
March 26 I was having dinner at MJ O'Connor's at Park Plaza. Separated by a partition, you were in the booth next to us having drinks with a man (boyfriend?) and another woman. You have stylish short blond hair and you wore an attractive light-blue sleeveless top, but it was your amazing cheekbones that first caught my attention. An embarrassingly early night, circumstances and most of all my timidity prevented any introduction. I wore dark-rimmed glasses and several times we "exchanged" eye contact, a euphemism for "caught looking." I felt a spark and have been profoundly distracted ever since. I'm hoping the feeling was mutual and wishing for the opportunity to properly introduce myself.

To All the Boys Not in My Life
For all the immature, stupid little boys who have crossed my path in the past two years: Grow up! Learn to be men. Stop whining about life. Get a goal, get a dream and then get back to me because I don't date little boys. Little boys who have no goals, who think they are the greatest thing since sliced bread, who attempt to degrade me because I am a smart, beautiful woman—you are just not my style. You may appear normal at first glance but deep down inside, you're truly a tripping head case. What was that, little boys? You're intimidated by me? Not my problem. I've always been nothing but nice to you. I'm too honest? Well, golly gee, should I kiss the ground you walk on instead? For all the little boys who are not in my life—I'm glad! Stay away from me!

Looking for Raguel
We met April 4 at the MFA. I was sorry that our time together was cut short by the arrival of your date. Later in the night I gave you information on how to reach me, but I'm not sure you got it all. I haven't stopped thinking of you. I daydream about what spending time with you would be like.
—kat6661@msn.com

Nellie at Good Life
You were at the Good Life April 12 with a group of friends. I was there with friends feeling like the fifth wheel as the only single in the group. You: tall with dark brown hair, smoking body and outgoing personality. You have a fantastic smile, and your laughter is contagious. Your friends called you Nellie. We made eye contact a couple times before we finally chatted briefly, but when I turned to check in with my table, you were gone before I could get your number. I'd like to get to take you out sometime soon. Please e-mail if you're interested.

We Shared Books, but Not Addresses
April 4: You got on the Red Line at Central or Kendall, sat down next to me, had a killer smile, and were reading A Confederacy of Dunces by John Kennedy Toole. I was wearing a green jacket, got off at Park Street and was reading The Eyre Affair by Jasper Fforde. I commented on how I'd read your book and liked it. We exchanged a few words and thoughts, but I was too chicken to give you my number or e-mail. You were slightly less chicken than me—as I got up to go at Park Street, you handed me a yellow sticky note, but alas, it was just the e-mail address of the book club server you belonged to. One more stop and I may have broken down and scribbled my e-mail down for you on half of the sticky note, but there wasn't time! I'm hoping that this esteemed publication makes it to your reading list occasionally, and if so, would you perhaps like another chance to chat about our favorite books and whatever else?

We've worked together for about tw years now. I don't see you every day but I certainly think about you every day. There was a time when I felt we had made a connection, but differences, and who knows what else, conspired to keep us apart. Good Charlotte
April 14 at 9pm on a Green Line train outbound toward Riverside: You were wearing a tight Good Charlotte T-shirt and tight sexy beige pants and have an attractiv body. You had your belly exposed and have a great Scottish accent. You were with a redhead girlfriend in jeans and a jean coat. I was wearing a red (go figure!) Red Sox hat, black coat with yellow and silver stripes and jeans. I was drinking coffee. As I continued to look your way, checking you out, yc seemed engrossed in your conversation with your friend. And got off at the Fenway stop as you continued on. If you'd like to go ou for coffee or perhaps hit the Macallan, please contact me.

Rockie Horoscope

APRIL 30 – MAY 13, 2003

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

TAURUS APRIL 20-MAY 20

Both the strivers and the slackers among you are about to experience another of those joyous, "I-can-do-no-wrong," kind of days. Those who relish rising to a challenge and revel in the sense of accomplishment that follows, will be thrilled when the Taurus sun squares expansive Jupiter midweek. Indulgent Bulls who prefer to have their cake and eat it, too, may see their latest dream come true while their Venus ruler and lucky Jupiter share a rewarding trine. Still to come: easy access to other people's money.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Entrepreneurs, editors and entertainers may soon have a rare opportunity to pitch a product or project with strong international appeal. However, the fact that your Mercury ruler will be retrograde could influence the outcome of this meeting. Before you confirm or cancel, ask yourself or your higher power: What do I do now? In times like these, your intuition is the best guide. Trust it also to point the way to a successful romantic encounter, to tell you when to press on and when to back off.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

The new moon on May Day can raise the level of the playing field, as well as your participation in the game, when it presents a pleasurable but not particularly challenging career opportunity. The Moon Child may also see a profit sooner rather than much later, for a change. Your partner could benefit from the enthusiasm and optimism generated by Jupiter's connection to courageous Mars in your house of joint money matters. Since this planetary arrangement won't occur again for many years, why not take the chance if you can?

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

One good thing can lead to another, as you're about to discover. Every now and again the Lion is rewarded for kindnesses shown in the past to people you hardly remember anymore. Such could be the case this week because 1) lucky Jupiter in your sign is attracting favors from artistic, affectionate Venus as well as from the adventurous Aries sun, and 2) since Mercury is retrograde in your Taurus midheaven, where your reputation is made, much of what happens this month will feel like a "blast from the past."

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Support this week comes from unexpected places and somewhat strange people, if not complete strangers. Now that unpredictable Uranus is in your Pisces house of allies and antagonists, you can't be sure that "same-old, same-old" will continue to feel comfortable. Although Virgo knows from experience that earth signs are easy, you may be surprised, even shocked by the nature of the joint venture the Taurus new moon introduces. Sensible and sensual, innovative and inspirational, and irresistibly romantic.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Not everyone can win the lottery, but Librans have a better chance this week than most. Actually, Lions, Rams and Centaurs are also in the running. This is one of those fun-filled times when your relatively fortunate Venus ruler is favored by immensely fortunate Jupiter. Under the circumstances, there's not much to do except not be too extravagant, overly friendly or excessively affectionate, at least until you know for certain that Lady Luck has chosen you, above all others, to receive her blessings.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Lucky in love and lucky at cards! What magical landscape did you fall into? While magnetic Venus is in your house of romance and risk, you'll pull in plenty of the goodies that jolly, generous Jupiter usually bestows. You'll also thrill to the depth of feeling your passionate Pluto co-ruler evokes when it aligns with the goddess next week. You're not going to have this sweet a setup again in this lifetime, so make the most of the advantages you're given. P.S. The Taurus new moon on May Day favors all things matrimonial.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

The Archer has a tendency to go way over the top and assume that your lucky streak will never end whenever Venus forms a mutually beneficial arrangement with your Jupiter ruler. Their periodic connections usually result in too much of a good thing: too many sweets, too many promises, too much exuberance bordering on bravado. So knowing that you're bound to crash, that your luck will eventually turn, try to keep a sense of perspective about the good stuff you attract this week and the sexy situation you fall into next week.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Enjoy yourself; it's not later than you think. Since Mercury is retrograde until May 20, things will be moving very slowly, if at all. This would be a good time to visit old friends, fix up the house, replant the garden and spend time and money making your partner happier. Take advantage of the earthy, placid Taurus vibe while it's here; soon enough we'll be in jittery Gemini and you'll have places to go and lots of people to talk to. May Day is special; it marks the beginning of a significant lunar cycle.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Spring fever this year can make you dizzy. Because rip-roaring, red-hot Mars is in Aquarius, you've got more physical and sexual energy than usual. Unless you know where to direct it, you could constantly be on the verge of blowing your cool. Because you also have spiritual Neptune in your sign, some will sublimate those powerful surges of energy by acting "holier than thou." Some may become more musical or artistic; others will focus on their partner and how they can make the relationship as good as it gets.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Qualities you value in people, as well as your valuables, may become a much bigger deal for Fish who are figuring out what they're worth. The May Day new moon ushers in a period of questions regarding finances: "Which side is my bread buttered on? Am I toast?" Plus, the urge to spend like a drunken sailor or a media mogul could become overpowering, simply because extravagant, enthusiastic Jupiter in your house of romance and recreation is "lit." How much do you have to spend to make your loved ones happy?

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

While Mercury is retrograde in your house of earnings, assets and values (until May 20), take a hard look at all that you treasure, what you can get rid of and what you hope to attain or acquire next. This is a good time to examine your emotional ties to your "stuff" and also to change ingrained spending habits. Meanwhile, an acquaintance may present you with a novel proposal, something entertaining, entrepreneurial and quite extravagant. Thoroughly check it out but don't sign anything until Memorial Day is a memory.

Improper Sightings

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading The Improper Bostonian and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Alan Freidman, Bob Berlin, Gregg D'Andrea, Paul Gershkowitz and Richard Snyder left their one-piece neon-green ski suits at the lodge after reading the Spring Fashion issue in Aspen, Colo.

David Spooner solicits an opinion on the Spring Fashion cover from an iguana in the Washington-Slagbaai National Park in Bonaire, Netherlands Antilles. "Why does she not wear pink? She would blend in much better," was the reptile's critique.

Alaska Governor Frank Murkowski is up on spring fashion. "I need to know what to wear those two weeks in July," he says

Arlene Donenfeld met a furry little Australian fella and a koala bear at Bonorong Wildlife Park in Tasmania, Australia. She liked it there so much she bought a souvenir Bonorong boomerang.

Jennifer Walsh and Tara McGrath ward off the Norwalk virus on their cruise to Puerto Rico.

OF BOOKWORMS AND BOTOX...

In the late 1800s, Boston was the center of the American literary world. Of course, that lofty distinction has since moved on to other locations, most embarrassingly Oprah Winfrey's TV studio, but we've still got plenty to brag about, which was obvious at Literary Lights. A black-tie gala held at the Park Plaza by the Associates of the Boston Public Library, the swanky event attracts a well-read, well-dressed and well-heeled crowd who come to honor an annual crop of local authors. Among this year's were prolific Pulitzer prize–winner Art Buchwald; best-selling chick-book author Anita Diamant; second-generation literary genius Andre Dubus III; baby-faced medical writer Atul Gawande; Elvis expert Peter Guralnick; and Chinese literary phenomenon Ha Jin. On hand to fete them were such card-carrying members of the literati as New York Times columnist Anthony Lewis; best-selling financial scribe and stockbroker-to-the-stars John Spooner; eminent AIDS researcher and author Dr. Jerome Groopman; journalist and author Ben Bradlee Jr.; and such big-hearted types as Back Bay uber-philanthropists Bert and Rosalie Cohen; radio personality Upton Bell; Chestnut Hill gay divorcée Gale Minot; and Cambridge socialites Bill and Sally Fay Cottingham.

Following hors d'oeuvres and cocktails, guests moved into the gorgeously bedecked, candle-lit ballroom, where the dinner tables were strewn with ivy and books by the evening's authors. Each of the authors was acknowledged with applause and a pen from Cartier, and Buchwald delivered the keynote speech, but lest it sound like a totally high-brow evening, the following exchange was overheard between two female guests.

"You look great."

"Thanks. It's all pharmaceutical. Diet, exercise and plastic surgery."

DANCE HALL DAYS...

If you're going to ask people to show up in formalwear at six o'clock on a Tuesday evening, the event had better be as spectacular as the Wang Center's Annual Gala honoring mega-benefactors Susan and Bill Poduska.

The drinks-and-cheek-kissing portion of the evening was held in the marble splendor of the theater's lobby, with socialites circulating and Cirque du Soleil performers contorting themselves into interesting positions. Everyone then filed onto the stage for a four-course feast punctuated by entertainment like the Poduska's daughter-in-law, the acclaimed soprano Heather, singing; actors from the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company reciting love poetry and aerial acrobats performing jaw-dropping feats overhead during dessert.

Present and accounted for: Mellon Bank bigwig Barbara Casey; the delightful Grossman sisters, Amy and Mary Ellen; Boys and Girls Clubs head honcha Linda Whitlock; Boston Ballet panjandrum Mikko Nissinen; grande dame Dorothy Arnold; noir novelist Robert B. Parker and the irresistible Joan; and one guest who said, "This is the first party I've been to in ages where I don't feel like using the baby-sitter excuse to leave early."

THE ONLY THING MISSING WAS HEF...

Black-tie fund-raisers at the Ritz are generally sedate affairs where everyone waits politely for the first possible opportunity to bolt for the door, but the Steppingstone Foundation's Crystal Ball was more like New Year's Eve at the Playboy Mansion, complete with sweaty dancing bodies, uninhibited behavior and one unfortunate soul vomiting in the bathroom.

Participating in all this revelry were sundry and assorted so-and-so's, such as perennial hipster Swing Robertson; the hale and hearty Tom and Carolyn Loucas; the super-suave Peter Creighton; Ricky Ricardo doppelganger Carlos Ruisanchez with the stunning Mary Arnett and Caitrin Moran; Sports Club L.A. trainer Paul Travers and his gorgeous squeeze, Lisa LeBlanc; and stunning blonde Betsy Danziger, with her husband, Mike, who was the high bidder in the silent auction for the dubious distinction of being mentioned in this column.

Proof that it was a slamming party: Even after someone from the hotel shut the bars down, the funk band Eye to Eye and psychics from the Tremont Tea Room kept everyone entertained and happy.

BETTER HOMES AND HANGOUTS...

Between the tented cocktail party full of shiny happy people drinking wine and eating sushi and the voyeuristic thrill of wandering around a newly redecorated house, the preview gala for the Junior League's 2003 Decorators' Show House was worth the schlep all the way out to Lincoln.

Before and after admiring the tastefully appointed rooms and artfully placed tchotchkes that transformed the circa-1798 Noah Brooks Tavern into something straight out of MTV's Cribs, guests could rub elbows with an interesting assortment of nicely dressed do-gooders and giants of the design world. Among them: the dashing decorating duo of Chris Drake and Lee Bierly; Show House featured portrait artist and IMPROPER staff shutterbug Kerry Brett Hurley; bright young things Emily and Peter Webster; superhero lookalike Tom Zaccagnino; Newbury Street gallery owner Robert Klein; swanlike designers Suzanne Logan and Jane Mary Harrington; painter-turned-decorator Eric Roseff; several women wearing hairbands, numerous people who can discuss window treatments with gravity, and assorted others who know a good time when they see it.

Overheard in an upstairs bedroom: "This was supposed to be a playroom."

"Well," that woman's date observed, "there is a bed."

Not that the evening was without serious discussions, though, like the guy who asked a woman whether or not she wore fur.

"No, but I wear diamonds," she said. "Nothing died to make a diamond." To which he replied, "Except maybe the guy who dug it out of the mine." IB

At the Junior League's Decorators' Show House, clockwise from top: Eric Roseff; Suzanne Logan and Tom Zaccagnino; Kerry Brett Hurley and Marc Bordet.

FROM THE EDITOR

A NEW LOOK

With this issue, art director Carolyn Bowes realizes a goal we set a year ago when she joined the IMPROPER: to update the magazine's look. If you're a regular reader with an eye for detail, you may spot changes in everything from the typefaces to the color palette and layouts of the columns and calendar section. And if you find the results clean, modern and visually refreshing and the magazine (especially all those calendar pages) easier to read, then, happily, we've achieved our goals.

Our talented art director's work on this issue represents the magazine's first significant redesign since May 1999. It's the latest in a series of continual improvements—in print quality, color use, paper and binding—that reflect the magazine's growth since its founding in 1991. Today, as a full-color, glossy magazine, the IMPROPER has a higher page count than ever before, and media audits show an ever-growing readership (currently 313,500 people).

The improvements don't end with the redesign launched in this issue. Following our "better and better" mantra, content changes are in store for the magazine this year as well. Look for the first of those very soon in the form of a new column that we hope will become a must-read—and grist for party talk around the city.

We haven't fixed what we felt wasn't broken, though. So, while they may look a little different, the regular columns and departments you know and love are still where you expect them to be. And we're glad to launch our new look with an annual favorite—a cover story on Boston's hotel concierges. This year, focusing on taking the angst out of entertaining guests from out of town, four of these hospitality pros offer itineraries you can follow when friends and family come calling this summer. A feature exploring why karaoke has proven more than just a passing fad and another on the proliferation of women-owned businesses on the South End's Washington Street round out the issue.

As always, I'd be glad to hear your feedback on our stories, and I welcome your comments on our redesign.

HOMETOWN HEIFERS

I'd like to thank Mopsy for her story about Heifer International (April 30). As a volunteer and supporter of theirs for seven years, I know of the great help such a simple gift as a farm animal can make in the lives of the recipients. But I'd also like to point out that of the 45 countries in which Heifer works, one of those is our own USA, with projects going on right now in Massachusetts, Maine and New Hampshire. Interested people can even visit one of their learning centers at Overlook Farm in Rutland, Mass. Call 508-886-2221 or check them out at www.heifer.org.

GOOD CLEAN THOUGHTS

Good luck to Ezra on battling the "Axis of Patchouli" (April 30). I lived with a Phish-head for a semester in college and discovered they possess other fishy powers of resistance. Your futile attempts to overcome their general lack of cleaning abilities will be short-lived, and you'll soon find yourself wondering why the Y.E.M. from the 1999 New Year's show was so sick. And if you don't know what Y.E.M. stands for yet, there's still hope.

new in town

EAST MEETS WEST

"Hip" and "chic" may not be the first words that come to mind when describing the decor of many local Chinese restaurants. So when the folks at Peking Tom's invited us down for a sneak preview of their new digs in the former Hibernia, we weren't sure what to expect. But it certainly wasn't antique Tibetan bar stools, raw silk droplights and bamboo floors—not to mention kumquat mojitos and a mouthwatering menu of Asian favorites by Marc Orfaly, chef/owner of Pigalle.

Along with Orfaly and designer Kristine Irving, owner Michael Conlon, of 21st Amendment, Paramount and Blarney Stone fame, has created an ultra swank lounge with gourmet Asian food and décor to die for.

Let's start with the menu. "[Orfaly] has always had a passion for Asian food," says Conlon. The portions are meant for sharing (from $5 for dim sum–sized small plates to $19 for entrées), with hot plates like crab rangoon (made with real crab), orange and tamarind pork spare ribs, and curried mussels with cilantro. At the long, handmade teak bar, patrons can sip mai tais, zombies and sake ritas while nibbling on wasabi peas.

Meanwhile, the decor by Irving, who owns Koo de Kir on Beacon Hill, is all custom-made—from the Balinese mahogany-and-banana-leaf chairs to the giant Buddha over the back bar to the bathroom wallpaper made from Chinese newspapers.

The restaurant is a total departure from Conlon's Irish leanings, but he' excited to make Peking Tom's a place to "eat, drink and laugh," he says. "We could've done another place like the 21st or the Paramount and don really well, but this was a challenge. It's all about fun." 25 Kingston St., Boston (617-482-6282).—Erin Hagedorn and Julie Short

HOMEGROWN—JOEY MCINTYRE

From New Kid to solo artist to television and Broadway star, Joey McIntyre is living proof that there is life after boy bands. When we spoke with the 29-year-old Jamaica Plain native last fall, he was adjusting to life in L.A., beginning his fourth solo album and gearing up to join the cast of Fox's Boston Public. Nine months later, McIntyre is back on the block to reprise his leading role in Jonathan Larson's musical tick, tick...Boom! at the Wilbur Theatre May 27–June 8. The blue-eyed hometown boy sat down with us to chat about West Coast life, his career and getting lucky in love.

IB: What are the main differences between Boston and L.A.?

JM: The differences are pretty big. The palm trees, the beautiful weather and the ocean really have an effect on you—it's just a beautiful, magical place. And I just got engaged. I came out here and fell in love, and it's life-changing. I sold out. But when you're from Boston, you never leave.

IB: So who's the lucky lady?

JM: Her name is Barrett Williams. She's a realtor and she found me my first rental home.

IB: What are some of must do/see things on your list when in Boston?

JM: Gotta go to Golden Temple for the mai tais. Gotta catch a Sox game. And you gotta walk Jamaica Pond—it's beautiful. And besides that, just being home.

IB: How different are the real Boston public schools from the television version?

JM: You know, you don't see Jeri Ryan in one of her short skirts walking into the classroom in Boston. But Boston Public tries to deal with the issues that come up.

IB: Tell me about your upcoming album.

JM: We don't have a name yet, but hopefully it'll be out by the end of summer. It describes meeting my girlfriend and falling in love, putting my heart on the line. It was great, because when I got out there I was like, 'What am I going to write about?'

IB: Are you going to promote your album or stick with Boston Public if it's renewed?

JM: Hopefully we can incorporate everything. David Kelley loves music, so who knows; maybe Colin Flynn is this closet musician and maybe he'll give it a whirl. Not that David needs any help with plot ideas. When you're in this business, you gotta do whatever's in front of you, and I'm lucky enough to do all of it.—Jessica Iredale

FIRE UP THE BARBIE

Grab the charcoal and prep the grill—barbecue season has arrived. This year, just say no to freezer-burned patties and Oscar Meyers and up the ante with some gourmet fare. Below are some of the upscale fixings available at local gourmet markets.

- Sweet 100 cherry tomatoes with fresh mozzarella: $8 per pound. South End Formaggio, 268 Shawmut Ave., Boston (617-350-6996).
- Pearl all-beef, 3/4-lb hot dogs: $4.15 for four dogs. Epicurean Meat Market, 1704 Washington St., Boston (617-247-2117).
- Roasted red bliss potato salad with grainy mustard vinaigrette: $5 per pound. Deluca's Market, 11 Charles St., Boston (617-523-4343).
- Andouille sausage: $7.99 for four. Savenor's Market, 160 Charles St., Boston (617-723-6328).
- Brioche long rolls: $.75 per roll. Iggy's, 205 Arlington St., Watertown (617-924-0949).

An addendum: If all else fails, Joe's American Bar & Grill offers take-out barbecue. Your only responsibility is clean-up. 279 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-536-4200).

SUPER MARKETS

Garden of Plenty...Mary Lionnette and her sons James and Robert are expanding their shabby-chic South End café, Garden of Eden, to include a gourmet market by the same name in the café's original space. Mary tells us that the shop will open in late May as an Italian delicatessen with fresh breads, prepared foods, artisinal cheeses, meats and local produce. 577 Tremont. St., Boston (617-247-8377).

Malt Madness...In celebration of Starbucks' new Frappuccino flavors (mocha malt and chocolate malt blended creme), the first 65 customers to set foot in any of the java giant's bazillion locations between 2 and 4 pm on May 20 will receive a free malt tumbler. An even bigger shock to the system is that the whole deal requires no purchase—not even of one of the lowly drip coffees.

Ciao, Thailand...The North End has always been synonymous with Italian food. But Mai Thai, a new Thai restaurant on North Washington Street, has bucked the trend. Business partners Ahmed Berkane and Pat Thavornkasem opened the restaurant a few months back, offering authentic Thai cuisine at reasonable prices and a full bar. Looks like North Enders now have the option of peanut sauce with their noodles. 90 North Washington St., Boston (617-723-2022).

Tea Time's Up...Arlington's upscale little boîte Tea Tray in the Sky fell off the radar a few weeks ago and has reemerged as Elements, under the same ownership. Former Icarus chef Bill Flumerfelt, who had joined Tea Tray shortly before its transformation, revamped the menu to include seasonal American offerings like sautéed skate wing, and asparagus and goat cheese terrine, priced between $16 and $26. The eatery still features an extensive list of more than 100 teas, and the renovations include a new lounge area. 689 Mass. Ave., Arlington (781-643-7203).

Supermarket Sweep...Slowly but surely the local Star Markets are being replaced by Shaw's, and the latest notch on the grocer's belt is perhaps the most impressive yet. Holding court at the intersection of Huntington Avenue and Exeter Street, in the Prudential Center, the new übermarket, baptized Shaw's in the City, opened April 25. It's jaw-droppingly big, with 40,000 square feet of market space. The multilevel flagship store replaces the Boylston Street Star Market and features specialty departments such as LaCarte prepared foods, Wild Harvest organic foods, a sushi station and even a wine shop. 65 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-262-4688).

CHOCOLATE COUTURE

Finally, my two favorite things come together...high fashion and chocolate. No, it's not edible clothing, but close. Aliya Wali, a daughter of the family behind Dali, Cuchi Cuchi and Tapeo, has created Choco Choco House, which makes mini chocolate handbags. The chocolates are inspired by high-fashion handbags such as Gucci and Chanel, as well as original designs, and they are sold in boxes of six ($17.95), nine ($26.95) or 12 ($35.95) pieces. Celebrities have been gobbling them up—they were included in the gift bags when Ozzy and Sharon Osbourne hosted a benefit for Elton John's AIDS Foundation—and Vogue has been ordering them by the hundreds to give out as gifts. And these treats taste as good as they look, with flavors like cappuccino and blue flower Earl Grey tea—that is, if you can bring yourself to eat something so beautiful. www.chocochocohouse.com —Samantha House

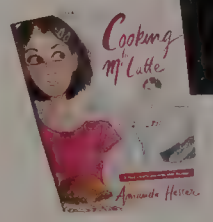
LOVE OVER LATTES

Part cookbook, part memoir, Cooking for Mr. Latte, a new book by New York Times food writer Amanda Hesser, traces this Bentley College grad's relationship with her now husband, Tad Friend—from the initial blind date (where she dubs him "Mr. Latte" after he has the gall to order a latte after dinner) to an anxious meeting with his parents to the couple's eventual nuptials. At the end of each chapter, Hesser includes a recipe—a dish that either she or a friend prepared or something off a restaurant menu—introduced with personal commentaries like this one on her aunt's meatloaf recipe: "Aunt Nora never follows [the recipe], and she can never bring herself to shape it into a loaf. My mother follows it to a T. You can decide: Should you be the rebellious sister, or the disciplinarian?"



Recently in town for a book-launching party at Rialto, 32-year-old Hesser described how she got into the world of food writing during her days at Bentley: "I wrote a letter to chef Jody Adams when she was at Michaela's and said, 'I know nothing about cooking, but is there any room in your kitchen? I'm willing to do whatever.'" Adams put her to work, plating desserts, running butter, straining stock. "I didn't realize it at the time, but Michaela's was the rare, extremely pleasant kitchen with an even-keeled, great boss," she says.

Later, Hesser took a seminar on French culinary history at Radcliffe and ended up meeting Sheryl Julian and Stephen Meuse of the Boston Globe—she's a food writer and he covers wine. The two introduced Hesser to the world of food writing. Fast-forward about a decade: Now, she's dining at New York's hottest restaurants as the Times' food columnist and schmoozing with the likes of Vogue's Jeffrey Steingarten and The Atlantic Monthly's Corby Kummer. "I figured out that I didn't have what it takes to be a chef—the physical stamina and the talent," she says. "But I knew that I could write about food."—Julie Short

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Bad Boys, Bad Boys...The media afford us many outlets to indulge our inner law enforcer—Cops, Law and Order, Judge Judy, Police Academy (1–6)—and if TV and movies' romanticized representation of criminal justice leaves you longing to try it out for yourself, here's your chance. The Boston Police Department's Citizen Police Academy provides free sessions every Wednesday from 6-8:30 pm at Police Headquarters. According to Sergeant Michael Chapman, the academy does not resemble actual recruit training (sorry, no honorary badges are awarded), but is designed to educate the community about police operations and teach citizens how they can help their local police. Topics range from homicide to weapons of mass destruction to homeland security. Through June 18. 1 Schroeder Plaza, Boston (617-343-4410).

Still Smokin'... Buddy Greco, a jazz musician and close friend of the late Frank Sinatra, swung by Lucky's Lounge last week along with his wife, Lezlie, to check out Sinatra Sundays and have one last cigar before the smoking ban went into effect. In town for their show Fever at the Copley Theater, they performed a few songs themselves, with Greco on piano and Anders on vocals. The duo also swapped Sinatra stories with the band, including this one: Buddy Greco was the guy who jumped out of the cake at Sinatra's 50th birthday bash.

One Man's Trash...Boston recently became home to a 1-800-GOT-JUNK franchise. Cousins Bob Valeri and Don Valerio tossed their tech jobs to open a local branch of the full-service junk removal service in late March. For a minimum charge of $95, the company hauls away anything and everything the trash men leave behind, from construction and renovation debris to old furniture. (They draw the line at hazardous waste, though.) Up to 60 percent of the junk is recycled or donated to local charities. Valeri stresses 1-800's emphasis on professional service. He says, "You won't have to worry about a guy with a broken-down pick-up truck showing up." www.1800gotjunk.com.

Snappy Turtle...Finding unique additions to one's wardrobe is easier said than done in this day of Banana Republic, J. Crew and Gap market saturation. But relief is in sight: Turtle, a women's clothing, jewelry and accessories boutique, opened March 1 in the South End. The shop is operated by jewelry designer Storey Hieronymus Houck and her husband, David, and stocks pieces by emerging designers from around the globe. David describes the merchandise as "very wearable, with an artistic flair, but nothing avant garde or really out there." Take a look. After all, it's not junior high anymore—you don't need to wear the same outfit as your best friend. 619 Tremont. St., Boston (617-266-2610).

Murder, He Wrote...Just in case any murderous Scottish nobles with visions of witches and bloody daggers make their way into a U.S. court, the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company and lawyers from the Federalist Society have a handle on proceedings. The third annual Shakespeare and the Law series presents MacBeth and the Insanity Defense at the Shubert Theatre May 22, as a prelude to the CSC's Shakespeare on the Common summer production of MacBeth. Company artistic director Steven Maler directs notable public officials, including House Speaker Thomas Finneran and Lieutenant Governor Kerry Healey, in a reading of Shakespeare's play, followed by a panel discussion on the legal implications of MacBeth's mental state. 4 pm. Free. 265 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393).

Super Sonik...Drivers scouring the streets of Boston in search of that elusive parking spot may have noticed that in addition to bearing "Tow Zone", "Street Cleaning" and "Resident Parking Only" restrictions, Boston's signposts have also been adorned with colorful images of castles, teapots and birds. It's the work of globetrotting urban "street artist" Sonik, whose unsanctioned Signs of Life project includes more than 600 whimsical installations in and around Boston. He says, "Our streets and surroundings contain many spaces for us all to creatively beautify and communicate visually. Advertising is a cancer in our world, and public art is the chemotherapy." The mystery sign artist also has a large street sculpture on view at Lowell's Revolving Museum. You can see more of Sonik's work at www.theartwheredreamscometrue.com.

Edible Art was held April 24 at Shreve, Crump & Low. Some 500 party-goers gathered with Boston's top chefs, who presented culinary masterpieces inspired by renowned works of art. Celebrity judges evaluated the chef's creations, and awards were given for both taste and design. The evening's proceeds support scholarships for minority and disadvantaged students at the Art Institute of Boston at Lesley University.

TIPPING OVER

Let's extend the list of tip-worthy services to include everything. I take all major credit cards.

I have a problem with this country's cherished custom of tipping. The idea is that you are receiving a type of service that varies in degree of quality, and you are to base your tip upon the level of service you have received. But in practice, I always leave at least a 15 percent tip, even if the waiter set my hair, instead of the banana flambé, on fire. I'm just too much of a wimp to leave a bad tip—or, the horror—no tip. I'm a pathological tipper. Call me Jack the Tipper.

Case in point: Upon a recent return to Logan, I got in a cab and asked to be taken to Brookline. The cabbie asked, "Which tunnel do you want to use?" This was such a stupid question that I didn't understand what he meant. Why would you take any tunnel other than the Sumner? "Just take Storrow Drive," I told him, which he interpreted as, "Please take the most illogical, circuitous route you can think of at the moment. Get on the Pike and drive back and forth through the tollbooths a couple times while you're at it. I am a moron and won't know the difference."

He took the Ted Williams Tunnel. Apparently, since the new extension opened in January, this has become a favorite tactic among cabbies to ring up a few extra bucks on the meter. He took the Southie exit while I sat in back cursing him under my breath. Logan to Brookline via Southie? By the time we climbed onto Route 93 and, roughly $10 into our trip, passed the Sumner Tunnel, I was ready to assault him through the coin slot. "Why didn't we take the Sumner Tunnel?" I demanded. "Because there's too much traffic that way," he said. "We'd be stuck at the tolls." It was 11 o'clock Sunday night, although I suppose it may have been rush hour in whichever country he was from.

Well, you can bet that when we got to Brookline, this seedy character got a tip commensurate with his tunnel-switching shenanigans. I said "Here's your tip: Don't rip people off, pud-face," and I gave him three cents more than the fare. OK, that's what I should have done. I actually wussed out and gave him a 20 percent tip because I started wondering if maybe he thought he really had taken the best route. It was theoretically possible. And then I'd be some kind of scumbag if I took food out of his children's mouths by not tipping.

The last time I failed to pay up an expected tip was when I went to Florida last winter, and that was due to sheer tip burnout. On vacation there were the obvious tips, like the servers for every meal and the bartenders for every drink, but there were also tips for the cleaning lady at the hotel, assorted cab drivers and the crew on a sailboat we took on a snuba-diving reef cruise. (Snuba is like diving except that your tank stays on the surface in a little raft. Breathing underwater is utterly terrifying, but that's a story for another time.) By the last day, I had tip overload. There was a tip jar in an ice-cream shop, and I made a conscious decision to ignore it. "I'm sorry, Mr. Ice-Cream Scooper," I thought, "I'm just not feeling like tipping anyone right now. You did a fine job; this is just an issue I'm having, and I'm sorry you're the victim." A little while later we took a tour of Hemingway's house, where we didn't tip the tour guide. Again, he did a fine job tour-guiding, but in a few hours I was going to be on a plane to Boston where it was roughly 15 degrees, and I would still be in a lush subtropical paradise, wandering around Hemingway's mansion in his Hawaiian shirt, feeding six-toed cats. That I should give him extra money to endure this hardship seemed laughable.

Maybe my underlying problem is that I'm jealous. Hey, I provide a service. It would make me feel very well-appreciated if everyone who reads the IMPROPER tipped me, say, four cents per column (or, to put it another way, $1 per year). With 313,000 readers at last count, that would really provide me with incentive to take care of you and not spit in your paragraphs. On second thought, maybe that's a bad idea, because $313,000 might be enough for me to live in Mexico for a few years, eating burritos and taking an afternoon siesta every day like I know I'm meant to do. You'd like to read about that, right? iB

Soroff ON

ISRAEL HOROVITZ

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

One of theater's most prolific and gifted playwrights, Israel Horovitz was born and raised in Wakefield and studied acting at London's Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts from 1961 to 1963. In 1975, he received a master's degree in English literature from the City University of New York. His plays have been translated into more than 20 languages and include such works as The Indian Wants the Bronx, which launched the career of Al Pacino; Line, which is now in its 29th year and ranks as the longest-running play in New York; Rats; Today I Am a Fountain Pen; Hopscotch; Park Your Car in Harvard Yard; and Lebensraum. In 1979, he founded the Gloucester Stage Company, and he has served as its artistic director since then. His screenplays include Author! Author!, A Man in Love, and Sunshine, and he has acted in several films, including HBO's Subway Stories and PBS' The First Seven Years. A two-time winner of the Obie award, he has also received the Drama Desk Award, the Prix du Jury at the Cannes Film Festival and many other honors. His adult children include Matthew, a television personality; Rachel, a feature film producer; and Adam, a member of the Beastie Boys. He lives in New York and in Gloucester with his wife, Gillian, a world-class marathon runner, and their twins. This summer in Gloucester he will present the 35th anniversary production of The Indian Wants the Bronx, as well as three world premieres.

"[MUSICALS] DEPRESS ME, MOSTLY BECAUSE I WATCH THE AUDIENCE AND THINK, 'IF THIS IS WHAT THEY WANT, THERE'S REALLY NO PLACE FOR ME IN THIS WORLD.'"

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, your name. Does it get you a discount on El Al?

Israel Horovitz: Well, it's not my real name, which was very Waspy. I changed it because I'd always wanted to pass as Jewish.

JS: Why Gloucester?

IH: I grew up in Wakefield, and Gloucester was the place we went on special days. After I came to New York to be a playwright, I became terrified to leave. I thought they'd forget me instantly. I was so scared the logo "playwright" would fall off my forehead that it was years before I could go back to Massachusetts, but when I finally did, it was a fluke. A friend had been touring in a play, and I saw him on the street in New York. He said the play had closed early, and the house where the cast had been staying, which was paid for through the next two weeks, was sitting empty in Gloucester. We went up, and that was it. After I bought the house I'm still in, I thought, "What the hell am I gonna do in a town without a theater?" So we started Gloucester Stage Company.

JS: You started performing in the back room of a tavern. Was that an auspicious place to stage plays?

IH: Well, it was free. But the significant thing was that literally our first night, there was a line of people outside on the sidewalk and it was packed.

JS: So it was an instant success?

IH: Well, yes, in the sense that for years I could make up any deficit we had by writing a check for a few hundred bucks. I've always known that you can make a small fortune in the theater. You only need to start out with a large fortune.

JS: Line is the longest-running play in New York. To what does it owe its longevity?

IH: It's been going 30 years next year, and it's survived because it's cheap. It's five actors on an empty stage with a piece of tape, and it's funny. You'd think I would've learned something from that.

JS: Which musical would you rather sit through: Phantom of the Opera or Cats?

IH: I don't go to musicals, and I haven't seen one in years. They depress me, mostly because I watch the audience and think, "If this is what they want, there's really no place for me in this world." I can't bear it.

JS: Most theater people are superstitious. Do you have any superstitions?

IH: I need strolling violins near me at all times.

JS: Is Al Pacino a playwright's dream to work with?

IH: I don't know if any movie star can be a playwright's dream to work with, but Al has a particularly good story sense, and he's like a dog with a bone when he sinks his teeth into something. He is an astonishing personality.

JS: Is there an actor you'd never work with again?

IH: There's a whole list, but I don't intend to publish it. [Laughs.] What I can say is that they're essentially people who remind me of myself at my worst.

JS: Is it harder to write drama or comedy?

IH: That's sort of what Terrence McNally and I are talking about now. I'm in awe of his comic talent, and I think it works in reverse with him. There's something I do, a sadness I dragged from my childhood, that comes out as very strong drama.

JS: How about the biggest difference between writing for the screen and for the stage?

IH: When you're writing movies, you're so involved with so many goddamn people, and it just goes on and on. But I enjoy it. I've written a film that I'm going to direct next year when my youngest kids go off to college. Next year will be the first year in 41 years that I haven't had a child living at home. I have a team of psychiatrists standing by.

JS: Does Neil Simon get the respect he deserves?

IH: Who?

JS: Neil Simon. The playwright.

IH: I don't know who you mean.

JS: Enough said. So who would you rather go out on a three-day bender with: Sam Shepard, Tom Stoppard, David Mamet or Christopher Durang?

IH: I've been out on benders with all o those people, so I guess you need to find somebody new.

JS: You've returned to acting. Are you good?

IH: Yeah, I have a range of maybe A to B. Or B-minus. If I'm cast right, though there's nobody better.

JS: You're a bit of a health nut. Are you neurotic about it?

IH: I think it tells you how dissolute I was at one time. When I was at drama school in London, I was smoking and drinking and drugging with the best of 'em, but Gielgud came to the school to talk, and a week later Olivier did too. Gielgud said that every morning he memorized an article from the newspaper, verbatim, because the brain was a muscle that needed to be exercised. And Olivier talked about his exercise regimen. At around the same time, I started to meet a bunch of playwrights, and I thought, "My God, I don't want to look like that." I realized my body wasn't something that existed just to carry my head from room to room. I also got so drunk one night that I fell down a flight of stairs and through a plate glass window. That was a good piece of punctuation.

JS: If Ibsen or Chekhov had lived and written in Gloucester, what one thing would theater-goers know about it?

IH: That's a brilliant question. I don't really feel Chekhov the way I feel Ibsen. My new play, the duet I'm working on with Terrence McNally, is very Ibsen-like. It has the same goal, to kind of redefine classical tragedy in modern terms. I just don't feel Chekhov's work. I know I'm supposed to.

JS: Favorite form of real-life theater?

IH: Living in New York, the subway or the streets, equally. I can easily go from morning to night doing nothing but watching those two things. IB Wondering how to entertain your visitors this summer? Four Boston concierges have the answers.

COMPILED BY JESSICA IREDALE PHOTOGRAPHS BY DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

With its blustery winds and piles of snow, Boston doesn't exactly offer a warm welcome to those who visit during the long cold season. But once the warm weather arrives, Bostonians' friends and family members flock from all over, lured by the charms of a city in full bloom. There are the Swan Boats, Red Sox games, concerts, walks along the waterfront, festivals and picnics on the Charles....In the summer, there is simply too much to do, and the pressures of being a good host can mount as you try to plan the best activities for your visitors.

With so many options to choose from, we asked four of the city's most knowledgeable concierges to design weekend itineraries tailored for guests that range from your sister and her elementary school kids to a hard-to-impress urban sophisticate. Nine Zero's Chuck Huller adopts the jet-set mentality for that worldly friend from New York, while Robert Morrissette of the Boston Harbor Hotel offers a family-oriented tour-de-fun that will delight anyone who has children—and goes to bed early. Jennifer George of the Ritz-Carlton Boston gets creative for your arts aficionado uncle, and Jerry Good of the Colonnade keeps the atmosphere light and the drinks steady for your party-hearty college buddy. By Sunday night, your only worry will be getting your guests to pack up their things and say goodbye.

GUEST: NEW YORK SOPHISTICATE

Friday

9 pm: The weekend begins with an upscale dinner at Mantra. The French and Indian cuisine, restored bank vault and minimalist décor will impress even the most worldly-wise guest. 52 Temple Place, Boston (617-542-8111).

11 pm: After dinner, walk across the street to Limbo, a cool club where you can relax and have a few drinks while listening to live jazz. 49 Temple Place, Boston (617-338-0280).

12:30 am: A 10-minute walk brings you to the three-story dance club called Level. Mingle and dance to pulsating music spun by some of the city's best DJs. You can also reserve a table, but that requires a minimum purchase of one bottle of wine or champagne. 295 Franklin St., Boston (617-338-1000).

2 am: Call it a night. You have a big day ahead of you tomorrow.

Saturday

9:30 am: Have brunch at Sel de la Terre or at Nine Zero's restaurant, Spire, two of the few spots where you can get a full brunch on Saturday. Sel de la Terre, 255 State St., Boston (617-720-1300); Spire, 90 Tremont St., Boston (617-772-0202).

11:30 am: Give yourselves the royal treatment at Etant Spa, a few blocks down the street. After the experts remove your knots and kinks, enjoy an espresso in the spa's private garden. 524 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-5040).

2 pm: All that relaxation may have stirred your appetite for lunch, and Newbury Street's Ciao Bella has the best veal chop in town. Be on your best behavior—general manager Brent Kaufman is a noted authority on dining etiquette who has appeared on The Food Network. 240A Newbury St., Boston (617-536-2626).

4 pm: New York's shopping scene can't be beat, but you can impress your friend with a look at Giorgio Armani's spring collection and a trip to the famous Louis Boston. Boutique Giorgio Armani, 22 Newbury St., Boston (617-267-3200); Louis Boston, 234 Berkeley St., Boston (617-262-6100).

6 pm: Enjoy a dinner at Bomboa, where the menu combines Brazilian and French flair. Try the cozido, a Latin pot-au-feu with braised brisket, oxtail, green beans, malanga, lotus root and bamboo rice. 35 Stanhope St., Boston (617-236-6363).

10:30 pm: Walk over to Saint, a new playground for a hip, discerning crowd. Try one of the many infusion drinks (the raspberry-infused vodka is delicious) and enjoy the heavenly atmosphere. 90 Exeter St., Boston (617-236-1134).

12:30 am: It's time to dance at Russian-themed Pravda 116. Hole up in one of the comfortable booths up front for a cocktail or two, then head to the back for thumping club beats. 116 Boylston St., Boston (617-482-7799).

2:15 am: Admittedly, round-the-clock dining options are a little more scarce in Boston than in New York, but News serves upscale diner cuisine until 5 am. It even has a full-time sushi chef. 150 Kneeland St., Boston (617-426-6397).

Sunday

10 am: Time for brunch at Aquitaine, the South End French bistro where you can savor delicious food (try the pressed sandwiches made with duck, ham and Gruyére cheese) as well as people-watching opportunities. 569 Tremont St., Boston (617-424-8577).

12:15 pm: Pick up Old Town Trolley, between Boston Common and the Public Garden, just a 15-minute walk from the restaurant. It sounds touristy, but the hour-long ride is a good way to take in the sights. Don't worry—fanny packs and cameras are optional. (617-269-7010).

2:30 pm: Hop off the trolley at the North End stop and walk over to Napoli Pastry, one of the newest Italian pastry shops in Boston. Owner Vincenzo Grimaldi is a veritable encyclopedia of knowledge on traditional pastries and gelati. 120 Salem St., Boston (617-742-0809).

4 pm: End the weekend with a little Revolutionary War history. The waterfront is a 10-minute walk from the North End, and a scenic 90-minute Boston Harbor Cruise is both informative and refreshing. 1 Long Wharf, Boston (617-227-4321).

5:30 pm: It's time to head home.

Saturday

8 am: After a restful night's sleep, start your day in the North End with a classic breakfast of eggs or pancakes at neighborhood favorite Anthony's Cafe on the Waterfront. 252 Commercial St., Boston (617-742-2987).

9 am: Next, take a short, scenic walk along the waterfront to the New England Aquarium. The kids can get their hands wet in the interactive exhibits like the tide pool, with sea stars, sea urchins and hermit crabs, and watch divers get up close and personal with the sharks in the 200,000-gallon Giant Ocean Tank. Feedings take place five times a day. Central Wharf, Boston (617-973-5200).

11 am: Head to the Aquarium's IMAX theater for a 3-D tour of the Titanic in Ghosts of the Abyss. In this 60-minute film, director James Cameron and his team take audiences two miles below sea level to tour the ship's wreckage. Abyss often sells out early, so either pick up your tickets when you arrive at the aquarium or call to reserve them in advance. (866-815-IMAX).

12 pm: Walk over to nearby Faneuil Hall and Quincy Market for lunch. The Central Market building offers dining options from around the world, or you can stop at one of the many restaurants that line the surrounding cobblestone walkways. Todd English's Kingfish Hall is a favorite for outdoor dining and seafood. Save time to browse the shops, especially Zoinks! Toys, where the kids can check out unique playthings.

1:45 pm: To find out more information on historic Faneuil Hall and some of the other sites on the Freedom Trail, stop by the National Park Service Visitor Center at 15 State Street, a short walk from Faneuil Hall and just across from the Old State House. To walk the 2.5-mile Freedom Trail, follow the red stripe in the pavement down Washington Street to the Old South Meeting House. There, the kids can learn about the Boston Tea Party through artifacts and interactive exhibits. The Freedom Trail also takes you past the Granary Burying Ground, the resting place of historic figures like Paul Revere, Sam Adams, John Hancock and Elizabeth Foster Vergoose (better known as Mother Goose). Old State House, 206 Washington St., Boston (617-720-1713); Old South Meeting House, 310 Washington St., Boston (617-482-6439); Granary Burying Ground, Tremont St., Boston (617-635-7389).

3:30 pm: The Omni Parker House Hotel is a great place to stop and rest your feet. It's just a few blocks away from the historic burial ground, on the corner of School and Tremont streets. Don't miss out on a slice of the famous Boston cream pie from Parker's Restaurant—this is where the recipe originated. And although it might look like just another fancy hotel, the Parker House is rich with history. Pick up a booklet from the concierge to find the spot in Parker's where JFK proposed to Jackie. If you're a literary buff, you can check out the room where Charles Dickens worked on A Christmas Carol. 60 School St., Boston (617-227-8600).

5 pm: Take a rest before dinner. Find a bench on the Boston Common, just a short walk from the Parker House, and watch your nieces and nephews feed the squirrels. If your guests are staying at the Boston Harbor Hotel, this is a great time for everyone to take a dip in the indoor pool.

6 pm: Boston's North End offers a real taste of the ol country, and what kid doesn't love spaghetti or pizza? Mar Italian spots cater to kids, and Saraceno's is a good bet fo adults too, with its osso buco and lobster and shrimp fra d avolo. 286 Hanover St., Boston (617-227-5888).

7:15 pm: Walk off a big pasta dinner with a stro through the North End. In North Square, located just few blocks from the cluster of restaurants on Hanov Street, you can walk past Paul Revere's house. (Tourin hours for the Revere House are 9:30 am-5:15 pm, so ma it on your agenda for the next visit.) Over on Sale Street, there's the Old North Church and the lantern that signaled Revere's famous ride. Paul Revere House, North Square, Boston (617-523-2338); Old North Churc 193 Salem St., Boston (617-523-6676).

7:30 pm: Take the clan back to Hanover Street for canno and Italian cookies at one of the many bakeries and cafés.

8:30 pm: Walk back through Faneuil Hall Marketplace see the street performers before heading home for the nigh

Sunday

8 am: Once everyone is dressed and ready for the da head to Margo Bistro at the Harborside Inn, a gre breakfast spot located on State Street. Try the Gran Marnier French toast or, for smaller appetites, th short stack of pancakes. 185 State St., Boston (61 670-2033).

9 am: If you're not too tired from yesterday's walkin head to the Boston Public Garden on foot. Otherwis take the Green Line to the Arlington stop or have taxi drop you off on the corner of Charles and Beaco Streets, and then stroll through the garden. Snap couple of pictures of the kids by the bronze Make Wa for Ducklings sculptures, created by artist Nan Schön as a tribute to Robert McCloskey's popular chi dren's book. Then, everyone can take a leisurely 1 minute ride on the Swan Boats. Walk up Newbu Street for window shopping and stop for lunch at o of the many outdoor cafés. For the best views of Bea town, walk over to the nearby Prudential Tower a take the elevator up to the Skywalk Observatory. A terwards, stroll down Boylston to FAO Schwarz, whe the kids will enjoy climbing on the lap of the gia teddy bear at the corner of Boylston and Berkel Streets. Swan Boats (617-522-1966); Prudential Sk walk (617-859-0648).

1 pm: Either cruise the harbor with characters from t city's past with Boston History Collaborative's Boston Sea tour, or return to the Prudential for a Duck Tour. T Duck Tour begins on wheels, but then the amphibious v hicle takes you for a ride on the Charles River. Ticke sell out quickly, so order in advance. Boston by Sea, Rowes Wharf (617-542-8000); Boston Duck Tours (61 723-3825).

3:30 pm: Grab a taxi and head over to the Children Museum for some fun and educational hands-on activ ties for the kids. Friday

7:30 pm: Put on something fancy for a night out at the Boston Pops. Whether by T or by taxi, make your way to Symphony Hall, where you'll tap your feet as Keith Lockhart leads the venerable New England orchestra in a program of American classics. 301 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-266-1200).

9:45 pm: The Top of the Hub is perfect for a postconcert cocktail. The restaurant on the 52nd story of the Prudential Tower provides a 360-degree view of Boston. 800 Boylston St., Boston (617-536-1775).

Saturday

9:30 am: From the hotel, take a leisurely stroll up the Commonwealth Avenue Mall and stop for a quick breakfast at Geoffrey's for delicious stuffed challah-bread French toast. Geoffrey's, 160 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-266-1122).

10:45 am: After breakfast, make your way back downtown via the Green Line to Park Street. A few steps away, on the corner of Park and Beacon streets, is the Library of the Boston Athenaeum. Modeled after a Venetian palazzo, it's the oldest independent library in the country. Visit the art gallery (home to delicate porcelains, stately marble busts and luminous oil paintings) and the library, which houses first editions of works by Lord Byron, T.S. Eliot and John Fowles, as well as many early publications in Native American languages. 10 1/2 Beacon St., Boston (617-227-0270).

12 pm: Just a few blocks up Beacon Street, take a tour of the perfectly preserved Gibson House, with its opulent, Victorian-era décor. Originally built for Catherine Hammond Gibson in 1859, the house was donated to the Gibson Society when the owner's grandson died. 137 Beacon St., Boston (617-267-6338).

1 pm: The Ritz-Carlton, nicknamed the Grand Dame of Arlington, is close by, so stop in for a quick lunch in the dining room, or venture further up Newbury and lunch at one of the many cafés. Ritz-Carlton Boston, 15 Arlington St., Boston (617-536-5700).

2 pm: After lunch, take a taxi to the Mary Baker Eddy Library to see the newly restored Mapparium. Walk through the center of this three-story stained-glass globe and glimpse our planet from the inside out. 200 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-450-7000).

3:30 pm: The Green Line's E train takes you to the Museum of Fine Arts. Peruse priceless masterpieces by Renoir, Monet and Picasso, and stop in at the museum shop for a souvenir. 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-267-9300).

6 pm: After your museum tour, head to Boston culinary institution Locke-Ober. Chef Lydia Shire's revamped continental menu offers old favorites like lobster Savannah and beef stroganoff in a historic Brahmin setting with elaborate carved walls, dark wood and chandeliers. 3 Winter Place, Boston (617-542-1340).

8 pm: The night's not over yet. Hail a cab and make your way to the Leather District for a nightcap and live jazz at Les Zygomates wine bar and French bistro. 129 South St., Boston (617-542-5108).

10:45 pm: Rest up for tomorrow.

Sunday

10:30 am: Start off the day with breakfast in the South End at Andy Husbands' trendy eatery Tremont 647. Don't be surprised to find your waiter clad in a bathrobe and bedroom slippers—it's pajama brunch on Sundays. 647 Tremont St., South End (617-266-4600).

12 pm: If you have a car, take a short (20-minute) drive to the DeCordova Museum and Sculpture Park. Located on 35 acres of woodland, the Sculpture Park features large-scale, outdoor contemporary sculpture. 51 Sandy Pond Road, Lincoln (781-259-8355).

3 pm: On the drive back, make your way to Brookline for a stop at the Larz Anderson Auto Museum, appreciated by men of all ages. The museum houses the vehicle collection of Anderson, a U.S. diplomat in the early 20th century. Items on exhibit include a 1901 Rochet-Schneider plus other early automotive artifacts, such as brick heaters and goggles. 15 Newton St., Brookline (617-522-6547, ext. 15).

5:30 pm: It's not exactly around the corner, but the trip over the river for dinner at Cambridge's UpStairs on the Square is a must. The magenta, chartreuse and gold-leaf walls, animal-print floors, and the contemporary American menu of chefs Amanda Lydon and Susan Regis make this a treat for the eyes and the palate. 91 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-864-1933).

7:30 pm: Give your uncle a hug and send him on his way.

GUEST: PARTY-ANIMAL COLLEGE FRIEND

Friday

8 pm: Kick off the weekend with drinks and dinner at one of the many great restaurants and bistros in the Back Bay and South End that draw a young, hip crowd. Try Rouge, Pho Republique or Brasserie Jo, the Colonnade's Parisian-style brasserie with al fresco seating, swanky zinc bar, and famous steak frites. Note: You'll have to ask the waiter if you want ketchup. Rouge, 480 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-867-0600); Pho Republique, 1415 Washington St., Boston (617-262-0005); Brasserie Jo, 120 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-425-3240).

9:45 pm: Take a short walk down Boylston to Kings, the new retro entertainment complex complete with pool tables, bowling and cocktails. As you wait for your lane, hang out in the de Ville lounge or shoot a game of pool. Note: There is a two-string limit for bowling. 10 Scotia St., Boston (617-266-2695).

11:45 pm: Take a short cab ride or the Green Line to the Alley, where you'll find several hoppin' clubs—such as Big Easy, Sugar Shack and Bishop's Pub—for some great drinks, music and dancing. 1 Boylston Place, Boston (617-351-7000).

Saturday

11 am: Roll out of bed on Saturday morning and head to the Pour House, a casual spot that serves killer breakfasts seven days a week. Huge portions, hot coffee and reasonable prices make this the perfect place to recover from a late night on the town. 909 Boylston St., Boston (617-236-1767).

1 pm: Once the caffeine works its magic, you're off to Fenway Park to catch the Red Sox in an afternoon thriller. For lunch, order a sausage sandwich (smothered in onions and peppers, of course) and a tap beer. If you're lucky, you've managed to secure two of the highly prized new seats atop the Green Monster in left field. No matter where you sit, bring a glove just in case. Yawkey Way, Boston (617-267-1700).

5 pm: Postgame, stroll across the street to Boston Beer Works, where you can sample more than 50 microbrews and enjoy some of the best chicken wings in town. 61 Brookline Ave., Boston (617-536-2337).

7 pm: For dinner, a good fortune is in store. It's off to Chinatown's Grand Chau Chow, a casual, affordable Chinese restaurant offering heaping portions of delicious seafood. Try the fried salted squid and peapod greens in garlic sauce. 41 Beach St., Boston (617- 292-5166).

9:30 pm: It's time to hit the clubs. Start at the Roxy in the Theater District. Its gilded balconies and private booths allow for both prime people watching and audible conversation. 279 Tremont St., Boston (617-338-7699).

11:45 pm: With newfound acquaintances in tow, head off to Aria, located just across the street, downstairs from the Wilbur Theater. Richly textured, dark and mysterious, Aria is the perfect setting for catching up with an old friend or getting to know someone new. 246 Tremont St., Boston (617-338-7080).

1:45 am: As Aria announces last call, take a short walk over to South Street Diner, a 1950s-era establishment that's open round the clock to satisfy your late-night cravings. The chocolate-chip pancakes are a must. 178 Kneeland St., Boston (617-350-0028).

Sunday

12 pm: Cleanse your soul Sunday morning at the House of Blues' renowned Gospel Brunch. For a wake-me-up, try the zesty Bloody Marys. 96 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-491-2583).

2:30 pm: While in Cambridge, wander over to the handsome campus of Harvard University. If you're feeling lazy, relax and take in a film at the nearby Brattle Theatre, which screens a mix of classics, art house favorites and funky, offbeat newer films. A schedule is posted outside the theater. 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-876-6837).

5 pm: After the film ends, take a taxi or the T over to Faneuil Hall for a couple of beers and a snack at Ames Plow or the Salty Dog, and watch the street performers entertain the crowd. Ames Plow, Quincy Market Building, Boston (617-523-8928); Salty Dog, 206 Faneuil Hall Marketplace (617-742-2094).

6 pm: Buy your buddy a large cup of strong coffee before he makes his way home. iB

belting it out

Why is karaoke still so popular? Seeking the answer, a singalong-phobe hits the circuit.

BY DANIEL SCHULMAN PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA DANIELS

When the IMPROPER asked me to explore our fine city's karaoke underbelly I felt a mixture of dread and fascination. My misgivings stemmed from the fact that karaoke appears to combine two of the things I dislike most: cover songs and public humiliation (my own or others'). On the other hand, the karaoke phenomenon has always fascinated me. What compels people to show off their talent (or lack of it) in front of a crowd of strangers? How much booze does it take for the average person to shed his or her inhibitions and belt out "Stayin' Alive"? And why has this trend not gone the way of tight-rolled jeans?

You might be surprised to learn that the Japanese word "karaoke" translates as "empty orchestra"—not "amateur singer, totally snockered." Most people trace karaoke's roots back to a snack shop in Kobe, Japan, during the early 1970s. When a scheduled performer failed to show up for his gig, the quick-thinking owner piped in taped music and encouraged his restless patrons to sing along. Karaoke eventually caught on throughout Japan and moved west.

"Karaoke's had its ups and downs," says DJ Dan McCarthy, who oversees one of Boston's longest-running karaoke nights at T's Pub. "During the mid-'90s, it was ridiculous; every place you looked, you saw signs for karaoke. Karaoke's definitely had its heyday, and its heyday is certainly not today." With the market saturated, many establishments dropped karaoke from their weekly schedules. But as the competition dwindled, a niche market thrived, and karaoke remains a part of Boston's nightlife today.

According to McCarthy, who also serves as the FleetCenter's house DJ during Bruins and Celtics games, karaoke draws a diverse audience, from intoxicated undergrads and traveling businesspeople to American Idol wannabes who sip tea with lemon before taking the stage and sharpen their chops on their own karaoke rigs at home. He recognizes that it's not for everyone, however. "It's a funny threshold. You may sing in the shower or sing along in the car, but actually belting something out in front of strangers is a hard step to take."

Any tips for the uninitiated? "For starters, go to a place that's slow," McCarthy says. "The audience tends to be more forgiving."

Destination: Hennessy's

Located in Faneuil Hall, Hennessy's is a just a few blocks away from the Purple Shamrock and the Bell in Hand, both of which host weekly karaoke nights. Palms sweaty, knees a-wobble, I approach the pub gingerly, half-expecting to be yanked onstage and forced to sing "I Will Survive" the moment I pass through the doorway. My entrance is anticlimactic. The pub is nearly deserted, except for a few scattered groups. There's no sign of the KJ (karaoke jockey) or his equipment.

By 9:45, most of the few patrons have trickled out. I'm well into my second pint when DJ Dana Z (his professional name) arrives lugging his equipment and several big songbooks. He sets up quickly at the front of the bar, unfurling cables, angling speakers and tweaking dials on the mixing board.

DJ Dan McCarthy calls Dana Zagoreos one of Boston's hardest-working KJs. It's easy to see why. In addition to Hennessy's, 42-year-old Zagoreos hosts karaoke at the Purple Shamrock and several other Boston-area pubs, typically putting in a six-day week. Somehow he also finds time to book dinner-theater engagements as an Elvis impersonator.

Zagoreos is quick to tell me how much he loves his job ("Who wouldn't?") and equally quick to admit that KJing can be nerve-racking, even dangerous, work. On busy nights would-be performers can wait for an hour and a half to get onstage. "It's gotten to the point where some people want to fight me," he says, recounting stories of disgruntled singers who become confrontational when they think he's playing favorites. "Sometimes audience members get wild and crazy. You almost need policemen for them. That ends up being me."

A rowdy chant of "Where's the DJ?" interrupts our conversation. A small crowd—largely 20-something men—has assembled around the stage. Zagoreos hurries to the mike and, without delay, calls a man named Murph to the stage. Swarthy, pot-bellied and apparently cockeyed drunk, Murph's appearance belies his cherubic tenor. His rendition of "Baby, I Need Your Lovin'" draws hearty applause from the crowd. As the night progresses, song selections run the gamut from Billy Joel's "River of Dreams" to the Black Crowes' version of "Hard to Handle." Singers range in skill from tolerable to highly talented. Noel Gentelles, Hennessy's general manager, takes it all in from behind the bar. "With the recession, the war, this has been a tough year for the hospitality industry. But this has been one of our steadiest nights," he tells me.

The crowd at the Milky Way whoops it up.

Destination: The Milky Way Lounge and Lanes

A mural painted on the wall outside the Milky Way features a large portrait of Mary Beth Cahill, host of the club's Mary Mary's All-Star Karaoke, surrounded by a slew of notables including Bob Marley and the Virgin Mary. When I meet Cahill, I find the likeness does her justice: long raven hair, toothy grin and an unmistakable glow. A former waitress at the Milky Way, Cahill became interested in karaoke five years ago, in Las Vegas. "I saw this couple with matching mullets sing [Sergio Mendes'] 'Never Gonna Let You Go,' and it really changed my life," she says. "I saw that and said, 'Man, there's limitless potential for fun and goofiness and accessibility to a range of people.'"

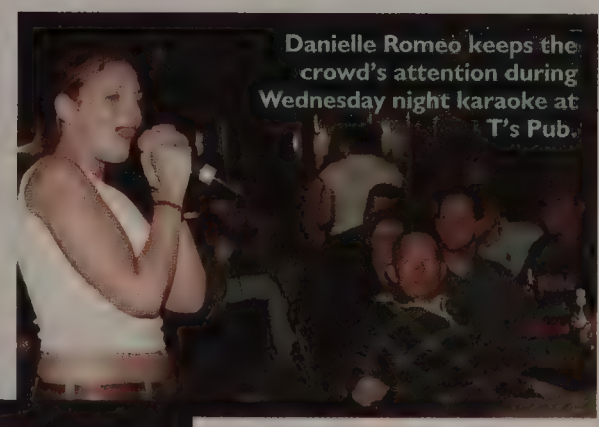
Four years ago, the Milky Way was a new addition to Jamaica Plain's bar scene. In search of weekly programming, the owner offered Cahill an opportunity to transform her passion for cheesy '80s rock and her penchant for onstage wackiness into a weekly Tuesday night event. "I try to create an atmosphere of acceptance and support," she tells me. "I go up first and try to make an ass of myself. I think that makes people feel more comfortable doing the same." No booing is allowed.

"Maryoke" attracts a diverse cross section. You'll find people of all ages and races. What they have in common is not how they dress, the type of music they like or the subcultures they identify with, but humor. They revel in karaoke kitsch and seem to find community in an environment where eccentricity is valued. Perhaps the best characterization of the clientele comes from a 28-year-old patron who preferred to remain anonymous: "When I first came here, it reminded me of that bar in Star Wars. You've got people here from every corner of the universe."

When Cahill kicks off the night with an animated version of "Jesse's Girl," a crowd of well over 100 packs the main room containing the bar, stage and the club's state-of-the-art sound system. Before the song is through, the dance floor is pulsing with gyrating bodies; the song queue extends to three pages.

One after another, sometimes in twos or threes, audience members sing classics, from Bruce Springsteen's "Thunder Road" to "Making Our Dreams Come True," the theme from Laverne and Shirley. Singers take the stage to boisterous cheers and conclude to deafening applause. Audience members occasionally jump onstage midsong to sing backup. The love is palpable.

As the evening draws on, I sense a pleasant, warm feeling taking root in my belly. That last cocktail perhaps? No. To my horror I realize I'm starting to enjoy karaoke.



Danielle Romeo keeps the crowd's attention during Wednesday night karaoke at T's Pub.

The same night, Jamey Rootes and Jeff Brantleik sing "Friends in Low Places" by Garth Brooks...

...Corey Rateau raps...

...and Tracy Freeman hits a high note.

Destination: T's Pub

Sandwiched between BU and BC, this unassuming sports bar draws a largely collegiate crowd. The Smirnoff Ice flows freely, and the bar is ground zero for new, cheesy pick-up lines. (Overheard: "You guys are sitting in my prime flirting section. You better be careful.")

T's has hosted karaoke for 13 years. "I'm surprised it's been going so long," says Lisa Burgoyne, who's tended bar here for the past 18 years. When I ask her what she thinks of the karaoke scene, she looks befuddled. "At first, I didn't know what to make of it. I thought it was a passing fad. But then it just took off and kept going." She attributes the success of karaoke at T's to McCarthy. "He gets everybody into it," she says. McCarthy has parceled out most of T's KJ duties to his employees, but he shows up on occasion to "throw a spark back into the crowd," he says. Tonight is one of those nights.

"The more you drink, the better you'll sound," McCarthy calls out to the audience, demonstrating with a long gulp of beer before getting the night started with Jimmy Buffett's "Margaritaville," a song he recommends for beginners. With the bar bustling and the night under way, the crowd's youth is reflected by the music they choose: Eminem, Pearl Jam, Stone Temple Pilots. Though the singers are warmly received, I'm told that some are tricked into performing. Their names and song selections are entered by prankster friends, and they're shoved onstage and forced to face the music, literally, when their turn is called.

Hijinks aside, there are some at T's who take karaoke pretty seriously. Jeff King, a 34-year-old child-care provider, speaks of key, modulation and measures with the reverence of a trained musician. He delights in executing particularly hard numbers and puts in hours each week perfecting his repertoire at home on his own karaoke machine.

To get up in front of this fun-loving, if somewhat raucous crowd—and quite a crowd it is—first-timers at T's karaoke will likely require a dose or two of "liquid courage" to combat performance anxiety. A word of advice: Try not to take the stage after Jeff King. He's good.

Destination: The Courtside

The Courtside is housed in a low-slung green building, its exterior plastered with no fewer than three banners advertising karaoke. Once inside, I feel as if I've stepped onto the set of a David Lynch film. The lights cast a reddish glow on the bar's patrons as a woman, hair masking her face, warbles along to a psychedelic dirge onstage, swaying haphazardly to the music.

Tonight's audience is unlike the others I've encountered thus far. Subdued, older, they respond with polite applause once a singer concludes and fall silent as another takes the stage. Many singers perform mellow classics—Lionel Richie, Peter Gabriel, James Taylor. Their songs, it seems, are not meant to rouse the crowd but to satisfy an inner desire. "I pick songs that I want to sing," Mark Hoffman, 35, tells me. "It gets rid of all that negative energy you build up during the week. It's therapeutic." Each week Hoffman, a hospice worker, travels from Chelsea to attend two, and sometimes all three, of the Courtside's weekly karaoke nights. Here, Hoffman goes by his stage name: the King of Courtside Karaoke, the World Famous Mark the Shark. When I ask how he received his nickname, he points to the burly KJ, Moose, also known as Mike Hannon.

The crowd is sparse. If I'm going to commit social suicide ("hari-karaoke," as I've termed it), this is the place to do it. Hands trembling, I flip through a songbook, remembering one of DJ Dana Z's karaoke adages: "Everybody has a voice. You just have to pick the right song." I choose a song that seems to fit the moment, write it shakily on a slip of paper and deliver it to Moose. An agonizing wait ensues. Each second is murder. My mind conjures nightmare scenarios. Noticing that I look out of sorts, Mark the Shark attempts to bolster my spirits. "Even Barry White gets nervous."

For a brief moment, I consider rushing the stage and tearing my song slip to shreds. But it's too late. My name echoes over the speakers. I make my way to the stage, trying to maintain a confident gait, and grasp the mike. The first bars of my song fill the room. The words flash on the screen before me, each word highlighted to indicate how it should be sung. I croon timidly through the first verse growing bolder as I lurch into the chorus: "I fell in to a burning ring of fire; I went down, down, down…"

My assault on Johnny Cash's legacy draws scattered applause. I stroll from the stage feeling exhilarated, even a bit cocky. As I return to my seat, I catch sight of a songbook sitting unattended at a nearby table. A strange thought occurs to me. Can it be? I think I want to do it again. iB

An Tua Nua, 835 Beacon St., Boston (617-262-2121). Wed., 9 pm to 1 am. Free. The name of this popular BU haunt is Gaelic for "new beginning," which is something many an intoxicated karaoke crooner may long for the morning after.

Bell in Hand, 45 Union St., Boston (617-227-2098). Tue., 9 pm to 2 am. Free. The Bell in Hand fills to capacity on karaoke nights with an equal mix of regulars and revelers. Wear your drinking shoes.

Clerys, 113 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-262-9874). Wed., 8:30 to 11 pm. Free. A crowd of tipsy South Enders and "repeat offenders" assaults popular favorites in this bustling neighborhood bar.

Club 58, 58 Ross Way, Quincy (617-471-7788). Sun., 9 pm to 1 am. Free. Karaoke night overlaps with "Service Industry Night" at this club south of the city.

Courtside Restaurant, 291 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-547-4374). Thu., Fri. and Sat., 9 pm to 1 am. Free. Your voice can sound like sandpaper on a gravel road, and the Courtside's supportive patrons will still give you a healthy round of applause.

Do Re Mi Music Studio, 442 Cambridge St., Allston (617-783-8900). Mon. through Thu., 4 pm to 1 am, and Fri. through Sun., 2 pm to 1 am. $30/hour per room for up to five people; $5 for each additional person. Sharpen your chops before hitting the karaoke circuit in one of Do Re Mi's 19 private singing lounges. No booze is served here, so be prepared; you might not sound as good as you think you do.

Ecko Lounge, 41 Essex St., Chinatown (617-338-8283). Sun. through Thu., 7 pm to 2 am. Two-drink minimum. This plush two-floor nightclub attracts a mix of Asian hipsters and collegiate clubgoers. Ecko's extensive songbooks hold thousands of top-40 favorites, as well as contemporary Chinese, Korean and Japanese titles.

Hannah's, 499 Broadway, Somerville (617-629-5302). Thu., 8:30 pm to 1 am. Free. Frequented by an odd mix of college coeds, locals and karaoke diehards, Hannah's occasionally hosts competitions for cash prizes.

Hennessy's, 25 Union St., Boston (617-742-2122). Wed. and Sun., 9 pm to 1 am. Free. You can sing Meat Loaf's "Paradise by the Dashboard Light," but DJ Dana Z would really prefer that you didn't.

Highland Café, 156 Highland Ave., Malden (781-324-2266). Sat., 8:30 pm to 12:30 am. Free. Here you can belt 'em out with the locals, and it's a safe bet that your friends will never find out.

Hub Pub, 18 Province St., Boston (617-227-8952). Every other Thu., 8:30 to 11 pm. Free. A new addition to the Hub Pub's entertainment roster, karaoke night is pulling in a substantial crowd, employees say.

Jose McIntyre's, 160 Milk St., Boston (617-451-9460). Thu., 9 pm to midnight. Free. This Irish pub draws a talented younger set—a bit more advanced than your average karaoke crooner. But since when is Jose an Irish name?

Maluken, 645 Beacon St., Boston (617-859-8828). Daily, 9 pm to 1 am. Minimum charge of $10 per person for food and/or drinks. Sake it to 'em in this authentic-style karaoke bar and restaurant.

The Milky Way Lounge and Lanes (Mary Mary's All-Star Karaoke), 403 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-524-3740). Tue., 9 pm to 2 am. $3 cover. Mary Beth Cahill holds court in this retro rec room. Find out why they call her the "Queen of Karaoke."

The Purple Shamrock, 1 Union St., Boston (617-227-2060). Tue., 10 pm to 2 am. Free. In a perfect world, renditions of "Girls Just Wanna Have Fun" would be limited to once per evening. This is not a perfect world.

Seapoint, 367 East 8th St., South Boston (617-268-1476). Sun., 8 pm to midnight. Free. Popular with the locals; it's "wicked pissah."

The Seaport Bar & Grille, 150 Northern Ave., Boston (617-357-8121), Fri. and Sun., 9:30 pm to 1 am. Free. A middle-aged crowd of South Boston locals and Financial District stragglers relives its glory days.

Slades Bar & Grill, 958 Tremont St., Roxbury (617-442-4600). Wed., 8 pm to 2 am. Free. Slades' soul and R&B karaoke night frequently draws crowds of up to 200. Each week, audience members choose a winner who will go on to compete for a $1,000 cash prize. American Idol wannabes should come on down for this competitive karaoke.

Sullivan's Pub, 85 Main St., Charlestown (617-242-9515). Thu., 8 pm to 1 am. Free. The pub's bartenders and servers vie for the mike along with a die-hard crowd of regulars.

T's Pub, 973 Comm. Ave., Allston (617-254-0807). Tue. and Wed., 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. Free. T's expert KJs can make anyone sound like a pro. Well, maybe not anyone.

Triple D's, 435 South Huntington Ave., Jamaica Plain (617-522-4966). Sat., 9 pm to 1 am. Free. Named like a strip club, themed like a sports bar, this low-rent pub is part owned by ex-boxer Joe Devlin. Perform poorly, and you'll have to answer to Joe. —D.S.

THE WOMEN OF

Washington Street

BY NINI DIANA

Alex Pinck
South End Video and Code 10

Launching new restaurants, boutiques, bakeries and even butcher shops, women are transforming a once-dicey neighborhood one business at a time

For much of the 1980s and '90s, parts of Washington Street in the South End were in serious disrepair. After the old elevated Orange Line was closed down, much of the formerly bustling area gave way to vacant lots where prostitutes and drug dealers conducted their business. The neighborhood wasn't considered a safe place for a woman to walk alone at night, never mind operate a business.

Over the past five years, however, Washington Street, along with the adjacent "SoWa" neighborhood, has staged a remarkable comeback. Nearly 50 new businesses have opened there. And women have played a big part in bringing business back to the area; nearly all of the businesses that have opened in the past two years are owned by women.

To Sheila Grove, a former real estate attorney who is now program director of Washington Gateway Main Street, that fact is mostly a happy coincidence, but perhaps not a surprising one given the sharp rise in women-owned businesses in the city, state and the country. According to the Center for Women's Business Research, the number of women-owned firms in Boston grew by 38 percent from 1997 to 2002, four times the overall growth rate for that period. Today, nearly 30 percent of businesses in the city are owned by women.

One of many Main Street projects devoted to transforming or restoring waning areas around the city, the Washington Gateway extends roughly from Melnea Cass Boulevard (near South Bay) to Herald Street (close to Bay Village). The women of Washington Street have defied the odds, survived seemingly endless construction that threatened their businesses, and shown they possess the pluck and determination to succeed.

One of the first women to open a business on the revitalized Washington Street was Alex Pinck, owner of South End Video and Code 10, a small restaurant next door. Feeling burnt out in her career in health care management, Pinck put her M.B.A. to use, writing a business plan that convinced the Small Business Administration to loan her the money she needed to open the video store. That was in 1999, when the neighborhood was still somewhat sketchy. Code 10 came in July 2001; the name, which means "lunch break" in police-speak, is an homage to the members of the force who looked after her during the late nights when she worked alone at the video store. Code 10 serves mostly hot dogs, sandwiches and soup.

Tenacious and resourceful, Pinck has been an active and vocal participant in the Washington Street restoration project. When paving of the street went almost a year past the projected completion date, she urged the city to finish the job, citing the loss of business she and others were suffering. She's endured criticism from some residents over the decidedly non-haute cuisine she serves at Code 10 and even battled South End neighbors over the placement of her sign. She has taken only one vacation in the past four years.

But there have been rewards too. Business has improved since the roadwork was completed, and Pinck says she feels good about her willingness to try anything once, to take more risks. "Graduate school gave me the tools and the confidence to discover that in myself," the entrepreneur says. Her decision to open her own businesses has also helped her form lasting relationships within her community. Code 10's informal American fare has even attracted some high profile customers—Pinck says that former Red Sox pitcher Luis Tiant and New York senator Hillary Clinton made separate stops there last November. Through it all, she's watched the neighborhood come back to life due, in no small part, to her own efforts. New business owners turn to Pinck for advice, and many of her customers are her friends. When asked how a social life is possible with so much to do, she looks around, arms outstretched, and says, "This is it."

When Joanne Chang looked at a potential site for a bakery on Washington Street three years ago, she immediately said no. "The street looked dank," she says. "The community garden was dried up." The building Chang looked at was one of many under construction as part of the Washington Gateway project. But after a friend took her on a walking tour of the neighborhood, pointing out all the things that would be coming to life in the next year, Chang decided to risk it. She pooled money that she'd been saving for years, borrowed the rest from a few relatives and opened Flour, the bakery of her dreams. "I had in my head exactly what I wanted it to be. I wanted it to be perfect," she says. But, she readily admits, "the first year was awful."

Far from her native Texas, her years as a Harvard undergraduate and her stint at the famed Payard Patisserie in New York, Chang found the transition from pastry chef to employer a difficult one. Although she had guidance from friends in the industry, there were things they couldn't help with. For the first six months, she says, she didn't see anyone who didn't work in the bakery. Determined to make the bakery a warm and welcoming place for employees and customers, she faced decisions and issues that were not part of her original dream, from managing employee vacations to coping with the rising price of dairy products. She found that every day something at the bakery wasn't exactly as she felt it should be. "It was frustrating," she says.

These days, Flour has a regular clientele that stops in for daily coffee or lunch or to pick up baked goods. Chang works 55 to 60 hours a week but says she doesn't feel overworked, although she does feel overstressed because she thinks about her business even when she is not there. But she finds reward in knowing she's created the environment she envisioned. "I feel as though I'm contributing to the growth of my employees," she says. And at the end of the day, she goes home feeling like she's done a good job.

For Michele Jacaruso and Nikki Christo, their shop, the Epicurean Meat Market, was more windfall than dream. In July 2001, Jacaruso walked out of her job as a restaurant manager with no immediate backup plan. "I was done with it," she says. "I'd had enough of the politics." For about a month, the two mulled over what to do; then a friend showed them the space at 1704 Washington. They had no business plan and no investors lined up. But Jacaruso took an advance on her credit card for a down payment on the lease, and the two combined their savings to buy inventory and secondhand equipment.

Although meat markets typically conjure up images of friendly, middle-aged men in stained aprons, the business seemed a natural choice to the two women. Jacaruso's grandparents owned a butcher shop in Waterbury, Conn., and her father was a meat cutter. With help from well-known meat purveyor John Dewar, the market was up and running in a matter of weeks. Dewar, they say, has been a mentor. Besides donating a butcher block and cutting board, he gave them a crash course in cutting. Almost everything else, they say, they've learned on the job.

It's just the two of them working, six days a week, dividing the duties in the shop. Christo makes marinades and sends recipes home with customers. "I've eaten this meat every day for a year; I know how to cook it," she jokes. Jacaruso does the bookkeeping and meat cutting. "Nikki is not allowed to cut," she says. "Her steak comes out like a doorstop."

Despite having little money (they still haven't paid themselves a salary) and enduring an uncertain first year that included opening shortly after the Sept. 11 attacks, the two have no regrets. While they have no experience to measure their success against, Jacaruso says they are paying the bills and have built a base of regular customers. Compared with the stress she was under as a restaurant manager, she calls running her own business a "utopia." Christo adds that it puts a smile on her face to know that they're doing a good thing for themselves and the neighborhood. "It's good to please someone," she says.

Five years ago, when chef Laura Brennan was looking for a space to open her rustic French-style restaurant, she refused a location on Washington Street. Three and a half years later, she was still looking when a friend who lives in the neighborhood told her about a location at 1395, right next to the space she originally rejected. In July 2001 she came back for a second look, then began pulling together her plan for Caffe Umbra almost immediately. Unlike some of the other female business owners in the neighborhood, Brennan chose to take on a silent partner who took care of raising funds.

Although she's been in the business for 25 years, most recently in the catering business and before that at the Mercury Bar, Brennan has never owned a restaurant, and she found that every decision, from choosing the kitchen equipment to buying glassware, was a challenge. Plus, the space has a narrow dining room, presenting further challenges. Brennan says she ran around for months with a tape measure, evaluating table sizes in every restaurant she visited. "I did a lot of extra work myself to keep costs down," she says. And she asked friends and the Washington Gateway for help doing things like designing the logo and raising money for signage.

Although Brennan oversaw everything with manager Jim Becker, she relied on her friend, architect Al McDonald, to help design the kitchen. The two met when McDonald was designing the kitchen at No. 9 Park, and he's helped Brennan through a difficult first year at Caffe Umbra. Every season brings new menu challenges, and the work, she says, is relentless.

Since opening in May 2002, Brennan hasn't even thought about taking a vacation. "I'm tired, but I'm not anxious," she says. "I couldn't have done this 20 years ago." She feels her experience has given her the clarity to handle restaurant operations, including cooking and menu planning, and the responsibilities of ownership. Although Brennan says she doesn't have the energy for a titillating social life, that sacrifice is well worth the rewards. "I'm my own boss. I have my own restaurant, not everybody gets to do that and that's pretty amazing. Live, die, fail, succeed—I've had my own business." IB

ROUNDING UP SQUARE MEALS

Helen Kohane of Weight Solutions works one-on-one with people who want to lose weight without going on a traditional diet. Weight Solutions provides support and makes suggestions for smarter shopping and wiser eating choices. Call 617-492-8222.

Helen Kohane is a social worker, and her weight-loss services are tinged with a therapeutic approach. Even though she does help clients delve into their motivations and feelings, Kohane describes her approach as more practical than therapeutic. Weight Solutions is not a diet program per se, though Kohane discusses some diet strategies and talks about food traps (like the insidious role of salt). Health risks alone sometimes aren't motivation enough to stick with a weight-loss program, and bad eating habits may be something an overweight person clings to when other life challenges seem out of his or her control. Softly, sympathetically, Kohane explores with clients such things as the counterproductive rebelliousness that causes them to sabotage healthier intentions, and the lonely self-destructiveness that leads to unhealthful eating. Always validating the positive-comfort element, she helps people pick the dishes, tableware and the nurturing setting that will symbolically "feed" the person, in addition to nourishing the body. "It's as if you were struck by lightning, rewiring your brain so you can think in creative ways nobody else can," says one satisfied client. "She's generous and serious, both."

THE FAMILY THAT EXPLORES TOGETHER...

The Mitchell family—John, Jana and their twin boys, Hugo and Harry—give you a child-and-family–oriented tour of the Commonwealth in their book, 4 Go Mad in Massachusetts. Find it at www.fourgomad.com.

According to the Mitchell family, the way to get kids to go on outings, including museums and other potentially too-grown-up places, is to let them become partial tour guides—going with the fun flow and possibly bypassing "important" sites. The Mitchells roamed across our state when twins Hugo and Harry were between the ages of 4 and 6 years old. Along with leisurely descriptions of various sites and some irreverent winks (one place has all too many hummingbirds and beetles), as well as personal information (Jana Mitchell's grandmother camped on Boston Common around 1910), they show you how the kids find their own enjoyment. Boy joy bursts forth at the Charles River Museum of Industry, where gigantic machines once made tiny things like tacks, and where Harry, tinkering with the gadgets screams, "I'm making electricity!" Alternatively, one lad finds the dank, exciting tunnels on Georges Island, land of soldiers and ghosts, an adventure in conquering fear. And the marvelous yuckiness of skulls and other preserved parts at the Warren Anatomical Museum, teeny memorabilia of the kids' fellow-shorty Tom Thumb at his Middleborough museum and the artifacts of daily life in Old Greenfield Village all have their various allure.

HOLY AZURE, FATHMAN

Chef Robert Fathman strikes again with an eclectic menu of cosmopolitan cuisine at the Lenox Hotel's swanky new eatery, Azure

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

The Roger Clemens of the kitchen, Robert Fathman has reappeared as an all-star in yet another Boston restaurant. This veteran of Grill 23, the Federalist and Trio is now starring at Azure, the swanky, urbane eatery of the Lenox Hotel in the Back Bay.

Pursuing the Clemens comparison, Fathman may be in line for his World Series ring based on his performance at Azure. He certainly has the magnificent venue in which to perform. Azure's large, rectangular dining room makes a striking statement, with cream-colored floor-to-ceiling draperies dressing the handsome, white woodwork–ribbed windows. Blue-green upholstered banquettes follow the periphery of the room, curving around corners. Blue velvet–tufted chairs supply the remainder of the seating. A divider of dark wood and frosted glass screens the kitchen from the dining room.

White tablecloths and white cotton napkins dress the tables, which are set with fine, substantial tableware. Shortly after we were seated, a server presented us with a basket of first-rate breads of different shapes, tastes and textures, all from the area's premier boulangerie, Iggy's. Soft butter and a spinach-and-farmer's-cheese spread accompanied a selection of traditional French baguettes; rustic, coarse-textured sourdough; large, round, hard-crusted dinner rolls; and rich raisin nut bread. Just after the bread came an amuse gueule, a tiny treat of tuna tartare with mint-ginger relish on a crisp potato gaufrette. On a subsequent evening, this treat was a slice of potato with fennel, carrot and chopped chives, a simple yet creative palate pleaser.

Azure's menu contains 11 first-course choices and nine main courses. Fathman's cuisine can be described as eclectic cosmopolitan, although I have seen it described as "French technique fused with Asian and New World influences." Based on the first appetizer we tried, I would acknowledge an Italian influence as well. Caramelized potato gnocchi with braised veal breast and porcini mushroom ragu ($11) charmed with its conception and captivated with its execution. These ultra-soft, luscious pillows of potato pasta were bathed in a cream sauce that, while rich and substantial, was not heavy. Nuggets of braised veal breast and firm-textured porcini mushrooms created an ensemble of delightful taste and texture contrasts.

While the self-laudatory title of another appetizer, "really good lobster soup" ($12), sounded presumptuous, we could not take issue with its accuracy. Intensely flavorful lobster broth, turned into the most delicate of stews by the skillful and restrained addition of butter and cream, contained flavorful, nutty morsels of lobster and an ethereal island of corn-and-parsley mousse floating at the surface. A heady dose of amontillado sherry complemented the richness of the broth without obscuring the flavor of the lobster. Finally among the appetizers was the white asparagus salad ($12), served with chopped marinated tomatoes, a slice of serrano ham, pieces of fresh mango and chopped cashews. The ultra-thin spears of asparagus were slightly more al dente than suits my taste, but the combined result, with textures ranging from the satiny ham to the crunchy cashews and the soft, luscious mango made it a successful dish nonetheless.

Among main courses, our favorite was a special one evening, a hangar steak ($26) garnished with puréed cauliflower and ga lic greens. Served on a large rectangul white platter with rounded corners, th dish boasted a presentation worthy of three-star Michelin restaurant, with th red and brown beef, white cauliflower, ar greens evoking a painter's palate. The i tense flavor and perfectly smooth textu of the cauliflower made it an exquisite a companiment to the steak, which w coarse textured but reasonably tender ar robust in flavor. Dark sauce redolent of t meat's cooking juices and garlic finish the dish with aplomb.

Of Fathman's four seafood offerings, w chose the Casco sea dabs ($28) served wi organic muscat grapes ver jus and pure potatoes. I did not have the presence mind to ask the kitchen to refrain from t standard Boston affectation of layering t fish on top of the potatoes, but the resu here was more than satisfactory. The thr large filets of this variety of sole had be lightly breaded and sautéed to a firm te ture, so sitting on the potatoes did n make them soggy, as often happens wi this mode of presentation. In what seem a harbinger of spring, four or five slend young carrots, with the stub of their tend green tops intact, were arrayed betwe and around the filets. The muscat gra sauce, served in dollops at either end of t long rectangular plate, provided the rig note of sweetness and fruitiness. The s of the dish, however, was the generc mound of sweet, nutty crabmeat gratin top of the fish. I can live with layeri when one of the layers is this good.

Least successful among the main cour
I tried was the pan-roasted venison ch ($28). These two thick chops, rare as dered, had been cured with maple su and were accompanied by roasted yams, garlicky, pine nut–studded broc rabe and a sauce of huckleberries a cranberry beans. Unfortunately, the fla of the venison was so gamy—this p critter was obviously not a cornpoacher—that the fruity sauce was insu ciently assertive to counteract it. In ter of presentation, the venison chop was in the same league as the other m courses. While the yams were delici and well prepared, they looked awkwa sitting as two massive boulders on plate, flanked by the venison chops propped up against the greens.

Azure offered eight desserts, ranging in price from $5 to $9. An assortment of four crème brûlées ($8) was served in a molded-glass plate with four wells included hazelnut, vanilla bean, cappuccino and orange blossom. All were delicious. A tiny, dark chocolate–wrapped cannoli filled with chocolate mousse accompanied the brûlées as a superb bonus. Despite their kaleidoscope of flavors and clever presentation, the crème brûlées paled next to the German chocolate cake ($9). We ordered this dessert on the insistence of our waiter, and we were glad we heeded his advice. Far from the refrigerator-cold, banal confection that often parades under the name, this German chocolate was a rich, moist indulgence, encased in a robe of dark chocolate with a layer of soft, coconut-laced praline and adorned with a scoop of fresh, homemade coconut ice cream. Large shards of toasted coconut were scattered on and around this extravaganza.

Service at Azure one Saturday evening was impeccable. Smiles were everywhere—on the bread server, the clearers, the hosts and hostesses, and especially our waiter, who was among the more knowledgeable, helpful, and courtly waiters we have encountered in some time. Even our doggy bag—made inevitable by the substantial size of Azure's portions—was held at the door rather than placed obtrusively on the table. For some reason, my second visit, on a weekday night, found the service less precise. The bread server confused a sourdough ficelle with the regular French baguette, the doggy bag was back on the table, and the pacing and attentiveness of the waitstaff were not on a par with our earlier experience. It was as if we had stumbled onto the second team.

A final word, about Azure's wine list. While I did enjoy the forward fruit, fine structure and full bouquet of the Coppola 1999 Diamond Series merlot (fairly priced at $24 a half bottle), I was disappointed that Azure offered no full bottle of red wine for less than $30, and that wine by the glass was not listed (athough on request the waiter disclosed that it does offer wines by the glass starting at $9). Still, in the greater scheme of things, compared with other hotel restaurants in the city whose wine lists start in the upper $40s for a bottle and $12 for a glass, Azure's wine prices were downright reasonable. And I think it's only a matter of time before Azure, in showcasing cuisine as superb as that created by Robert Fathman, follows the lead of other fine Boston restaurants that have started to offer credible wines in the mid and low $20 range for bottles and $6 or $7 a glass. iB

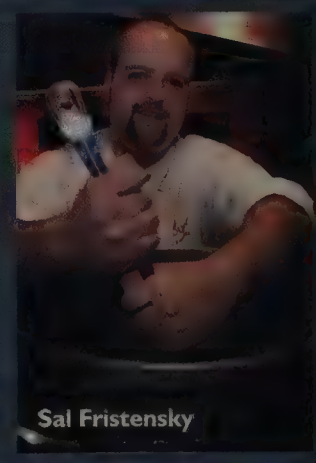
BOIL BASH

If life were like a movie, with a soundtrack playing in the background, then the director would cue "Suck the Head," the Radiators' 1987 paean to the joys of eating crawfish, for the scene at Rouge's Crawfish Boil on May 19. "It's the height of crawfish season in New Orleans right now, and ours will be a down-and-dirty boil," says Rouge's chef Sal Fristensky, who hosts this traditional Southern gathering. He elaborates on the proper crawfish-eating technique: "Pinch the tail, give it a twist and then suck the meat out of the head."



Sal Fristensky

The evening begins with Budweiser tall boys and hushpuppies on the patio as Fristensky tends to a pot of boiling water with potatoes and corn-on-the-cob spiced with lemon, cayenn pepper and celery salt. At the last minute, he'll throw in the crawfish (which he says taste lik boiled shrimp). When they're fully cooked, he'll dump them on the newspaper-covered table and guests will feast on the bounty, along with an iceberg lettuce salad and, for dessert, banana pudding.

Heard It Through the Apevine…

Primatologist's prefs...BLT's at the BPL?... Uncanned openings…

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

When renowned primatologist Dr. Jane Goodall was honored at a benefit dinner at Hamersley's Bistro, her preference for vegetarian fare certainly did not throw a monkey wrench into the works. Gordon Hamersley and the other five top Boston chefs on hand—Ana Sortun of Oleana, Jody Adams of Rialto, Steve Johnson of The Blue Room, Rich Vallente of Legal Sea Foods, and Chris Douglass of Icarus—simply adapted their dishes on the spot to suit Goodall. Hamersley and Douglas grilled wild mushrooms, instead of lamb, to serve over a risotto of spring peas and golden beets. "She seemed to love it," said a participant. So civilized.

Local chefs recently honored Dr. Jane Goodall (center) at Hamersley's Bistro.

Keep your voice down. Look it up in the card catalog. And never, ever, eat or drink in the library. In our age of rampantly ringing cellphones and Internet-based research, those traditional guidelines for library behavior seem almost quaint. As for the food and drink, soon there'll be no need for scofflaws to smuggle juice boxes and energy bars into the Boston Public Library, because the newly renovated McKim Building in Copley Square will house both a sit-down restaurant and a café. The restaurant, cleverly named Novel, will feature a luncheon buffet. But don't get the idea that a buffet means cafeteria-style food.

"I see us as a purveyor of fine foods," says chef in charge, Emil Grosso. Grosso, who was vice president of retail operations at Dean & Deluca in New York until he joined Sebastian's Catering as executive vice president six months ago, promises "authentic, creative food" at Novel (expect beef Wellington, crabcakes, monkfish and pork loin) and fine-quality, light breakfast and lunch fare at Sebastian's Map Room Café. Look for baked goods from New York and Boston bakers; specialty yogurts, including buffalo yogurt from Vermont and imported Greek yogurt; panini sandwiches and the like. Novel will also offer high tea from 2-4 pm. Opening is set for late May; no (book) jackets required. Watch out, Borders!

SECOND COURSE

Speaking of overdue, the planned spring opening of Bravo, the "exciting new dining destination" announced by the Museum of Fine Arts last February, is rather behind schedule. Design work is now under way on the space across from the Museum's Gund Gallery, and spokesperson Kieran Heffernan says she's not sure if it will open in June or not. Great art cannot be rushed, however, and when Bravo debuts, Heffernan asserts, "it's going to be fantastic."

Also fashionably late, but opening any minute now, is the much anticipated Excelsior, occupying the totally redesigned space of the former Biba. Chef/owner Lydia Shire and owner/manager Tim Lynch have brought in Alec Riveros as general manager, and Eric Buxton is wine manager and caretaker of the 400-plus bottle list. Lunch, dinner, and a bar menu, plus "lavish cocktails," will be served.

A mere three and a half months after a disastrous fire destroyed its dining room and bar, The Elephant Walk in Boston has been rebuilt and repaired. It will most likely be reopened by the time you read this. But call first, just to be sure.

Coalition of the Grilling: Mark your calendars for the sixth annual Chefs in Shorts event outside the Seaport Hotel on June 27....Whether you want to flick your Bic or light yourself up with a couple of basil lime gimlets, know that the patio is open and smokin' at Via Matta. And know that, since Via Matta was just named one of "75 Hot Tables in the World" by Conde Nast Traveler, you should stake out a table early. IB

Music: Eight Spicy Acts

Local label Kimchee Records is throwing an eight-band bash at Johnny D's in Somerville, showing off some of its top talent in one night. WMBR Pipeline host Bob Dubrow and engineer Andy Hong launched Kimchee in 1996 to get more exposure for bands whose music wasn't getting heard. The May 21 show is a testament to their accomplishments over the past eight years. It kicks off with Heidi Saperstein, followed by Rosa Chance Well (their first live appearance in more than a year), Tiger Saw, Torrez, the Pee Wee Fist, Seana Carmody and Blake Hazard. Finally, 27, recently returned from a European tour, headlines. It's a $10 cover, and if you do the math, that means it's only a buck and a quarter per band. Better still, it's all for a good cause—proceeds benefit the Somerville Arts Council. 17 Holland St., Somerville (617-776-2004). 8pm. $10.

Tastings: A Big Brew-haha

Back in the mid-'90s, when microbrews were all the rage and it seemed as if every other restaurant was a brew house, beer became something of an art form. Now only a few stalwarts (among them, Boston Beer Works, Cambridge Brewing Co. and Commonwealth Brewing Co.) remain, but the good news for lager lovers is that beer seems to be back in vogue. Nearly every other week, the IMPROPER's calendar features a beer tasting at some upscale establishment or another. The trend continues with the Art of Beer Festival at the Cyclorama May 24. Nearly 100 brewers will offer four-ounce samples, and participants can take seminars taught by the likes of Al Marzi of Harpoon Brewery, Chris Lohring of Tremont Brewery and Tod Mott of Haverhill Brewery. The ticket price includes a meal prepared by Redbones in Davis Square. Beer and barbecue... what more could you ask for? Cyclorama, Boston Center for the Arts, 539 Tremont St., Boston (617-426-8942). http://beeradvocate.com/aobf. May 24, 12-6 pm and 7-11 pm. $25, $30 at the door.

Music: A Swingin' Affair

Time to brush up on your Rat Pack history. Lucky's Lounge is throwing its third annual Sinatra-thon. The tribute, which marks the five-year anniversary of Frank Sinatra's death, features veteran crooners Alex MacDougall, Mark Mahar and the Al Vega Trio, all of whom have mastered the art of Sinatra covers. WPLM's Strictly Sinatra host Ron Della Chiesa will emcee the event. If you think you know your Old Blue Eyes trivia, you have a shot at taking home some fab prizes—one lucky winner gets an expenses-paid trip to Mohegan Sun. Performing Arts: Hangin' Tough

A mere three weeks before the premiere of his blockbuster hit musical, Rent, 35-year-old composer and lyricist Jonathan Larson died of an aortic aneurysm. He left behind two unproduced plays, one of which was a semi-autobiographical one-man show called Tick, Tick...Boom! It's the story of a young composer on the brink of turning 30, torn between his creative passions and his need for stability. Playwright David Auburn (Proof) pieced together the show using six different drafts found among Larson's belongings and created a three-character musical—now starring Joey McIntyre, formerly of New Kids on the Block and a current cast member of TV's Boston Public. The storyline is compelling, but let's be honest: Joey Mac's baby blues are the draw for more than a few former NKOTB fans. Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St., Boston (617-931-2787). www.broadwayinboston.com. Tue.-Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7 pm. May 27-June 8. $25-$60.

This will be the first of more than a dozen shows to honor more than five decades of New England music history. Also on the bill are the Mods and the Surf All-Stars, featuring Lenny Collins and Lenny Petze of the original Rhondells, Lenny Baker (lat with ShaNaNa), Bobby Matulina and Nicky Ladio of the original Pilgrims. Magicians delight and amaze at the Comedy Studio's Tuesday night Mystery Lounge.

Preview

Abracadabra!

On Tuesday nights, the Comedy Studio opens the floor to some of Boston's magicians

Magician Steven Kradolfer begins his act with the seemingly basic trick of tying a five-foot-long balloon into an animal. But then he does something unexpected: He swallows the balloon whole. That's when audiences realize they're in for more than the average rabbit-in-a-hat routine.

Kradolfer performs this month at the Comedy Studio's Mystery Lounge, a Tuesday-night series that challenges audiences' expectations of a magic show. Combining special effects and mind-reading techniques with comedy, the magicians present a professional magic show that's as amusing as it is mesmerizing. "This isn't your father's magic show," says magician Mike Bent, who partnered with Comedy Studio manager Rick Jenkins to pull the night together. "It's interactive with the audience, and it's right in your face."

Bent, Kradolfer and two other Boston-based magicians, Jon Stetson and David Oliver, have spent their careers performing magic and comedy shows around the country for corporations and colleges. But the men wanted a hometown venue where they could have fun on their night off. So they created the Mystery Lounge, an intimate gathering at the Comedy Studio that allows them to stray from their usually scripted show and interact informally with the audience. The night starts out with some pre-show entertainment—the magicians meet and mystify audience members at the Hong Kong bar before they head upstairs to the Comedy Studio to present their feature acts. Stetson wows with magic of the mind, revealing the serial number on the dollar bill in the pocket of an audience member, for example. Oliver makes doves vanish into thin air two feet from where the audience is sitting, and Bent mixes stand-up and special-effects comedy.

"It's great because I get to do things I can't do other places," says Bent, whose stunts sometimes include pretending to scoop out his eye with a melon baller. The group welcomes a different guest magician every week. "It's unlike anything you can find in Boston," says Jenkins. The Hong Kong, 1236 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-661-6507). MBTA: Red Line to Harvard. Tuesdays, 10 pm. $10. —Victoria Cook and Julie Short

Folk music is in the air in A Mighty Wind

BY PAUL SHERMAN

I recently rewatched Waiting for Guffman, one of the priceless, semi-improvised comedies Christopher Guest directed and co-wrote before A Mighty Wind. On the second viewing, what struck me about Guffman's hilarious story of townspeople struggling to stage a pageant was how clever the movie's songs were, and how much you rooted for these untalented amateurs to succeed on some level.

As in Rob Reiner's This Is Spinal Tap, in which Guest played the inimitably dim Nigel Tufnel, and in Guest's more recent Best in Show, the actors in A Mighty Wind make up their own dialogue. While it isn't funnier than Guffman, Guest's latest mockumentary, about three 1960s folk-music groups that reunite for a concert honoring their late manager, doesn't need a second viewing for similar qualities to emerge. One reason is that the cast wrote most of the songs they sing, so there's an unusually strong connection between the characters and the music. Guest and Spinal Tap bandmates Michael McKean and Harry Shearer wrote the songs of the earnest trio the Folksmen, characters they've been playing at least as far back as a mid-1980s Saturday Night Live appearance. They also penned many of those sung by the cheesy, Up with People–inspired New Main Street Singers, while SCTV and Guest-movie vets Eugene Levy and Catherine O'Hara wrote, together or singly, most of the songs of the one-time lovebirds they play, Mitch & Mickey.

Mitch & Mickey dominate A Mighty Wind. Reportedly inspired by Canadian duo Ian & Sylvia, in their heyday Mitch (Levy) was the cool guy strumming a guitar and Mickey (O'Hara) a raven-haired beauty playing an autoharp. A Mighty Wind shows us how, after the pair split musically and romantically, Mitch went into a downward spiral of drugs and depression, as illustrated by the morbid covers of his 1970s solo albums (with titles like Cry for Help).

John Michael Higgins, Jane Lynch, Parker Posey and Chris Moynihan play folk group the New Main Street Singers in Christopher Guest's new "mockumentary."

Once the memorial concert and accompanying TV broadcast begin to take shape, Mitch is the wild card. The movie teases us with the possibility that Mitch won't show up, or that if he does, he won't even be a shell of his former self. Levy, with scraggly hair that looks borrowed from Jerry Garcia's corpse, a wavering voice that struggles to articulate and the puzzled eyes of a housecat that's been asked to bake a cake, gives a brave performance that's both bizarre and touching. In the interviews and rehearsals with Mitch & Mickey—she's now settled down in suburbia with a catheter salesman—you can see the affection she still has for him, but you can also see her uneasiness with the person Mitch is now. These scenes achingly embody the film's irony of doughy 50-somethings uncomfortably revisiting the idealism of their younger days.

What makes the underlying tension between Mitch and Mickey so convincing is that Levy and O'Hara sing beautifully together. Musically, at least, they fit. "When You're Next to Me," "One More Time," "The Ballad of Bobby and June" and especially "A Kiss at the End of the Rainbow," the song that made them stars and that's most repeated, all have catchy harmonies. The last song adds the choicest story detail to A Mighty Wind: the suspense over whether Mickey and Mitch will kiss at the end of the song's performance, as they did on a legendary 1960s TV appearance.

The movie's one letdown is that Guest, McKean and Shearer's characters are barely developed as individuals (beyond each's bad hair). The New Main Street Singers' perky schtick is similarly one-dimensional. But the Mitch & Mickey scenes have a strong enough blend of daffiness, drama and sweetness that those qualities bleed through to the whole movie.

While Mitch & Mickey provide the richest blend of comedy and story in A Mighty Wind, there are also plenty of just plain absurd moments to enjoy: the bickering of the Folksmen over song selections, Ed Begley Jr. as a Swedish-born TV executive who peppers his speech with Yiddish, John Michael Higgins and Jane Lynch as the off-kilter husband-and-wife leaders of the New Main Street Singers and just about anything uttered by the great Fred Willard, again playing a twistedly obnoxious blowhard. iB

A Mighty Wind ★★★½

Anger Management ★★
I doubt that Jack Nicholson and Queen Latifa have ever competed for the same role. But th Nicholson-Adam Sandler comedy is cut from th same limp, high-concept formula as Bringing Dow the House. It's got the same sort of hapless hero, th same sort of annoying intruder to his life and th same pre-fab happy ending. This time, Sandler is th guy who gets put on the right path by the unorth dox outsider. He's a guy who needs assertivene training but who, due to several mix-ups, ends sentenced to the anger management semina Nicholson's character runs. About the only spar here are the outbursts by John Turturro, who pla the most angry member of the Nicholson-run su port group. You'll feel like him if you pay to see th (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Bend It Like Beckham ★★½
The feisty young woman caught between tw cultures—think Double Happiness, Mississippi Masa and My Big Fat Greek Wedding—gets trotted out y again in director Gurinder Chadha's latest, whi can't compare to her Bhaji on the Beach but is st involving. Parminder Nagra gives a winni performance as Jess, the Indian-English teen wi soccer skills and two Sikh parents who won't allo her to pursue such a nontraditional fema endeavor. When Jess is recruited to play for a lo women's team, with the possibility of discovery an American pro team, the scene is set for lots running around behind her parents' back and com mishaps—in fact, an awful lot of repetitive runni around and mishaps. It's all pretty predictable, b Nagra, Anupam Kher (as the heroine's father) a Keira Knightley (as her teammate and sometim rival), as well as Chadha's sense of compassion, he dignity fight caricature to a standoff. (At Bost Common, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Better Luck Tomorrow ★★★
Writer-director Justin Lin takes the Asian-Ame can movie beyond the immigrant experience in th free-wheeling story of high school honor studen who start dabbling in crime. The title is apparentl nod to John Woo's A Better Tomorrow, and this t is the story of friends whose relationships get ripp apart by their life of crime. Quick, funny, violen and smart, the movie marinates its irreverent ta on high school life in the stew of hormones a power that drives its teen characters. We've n heard the last from Lin. (At Copley Place and Ha vard Square.)

Blue Car ★★
Newcomer Agnes Bruckner gives a stunning perf mance as a confused high school senior, but writ director Karen Moncrieff's movie is a standard-iss indie debut. It never rises above its indie cliches: t troubled teen, divorced parents, self-destructive su porting characters who threaten to pull down th heroine, the sexual tension of 18-year-old Meg's r lationship with her supportive English teach (David Strathairn). Not bad, but not very speci either. (At Harvard Square.)

Bulletproof Monk ★½
Chow Yun-Fat deserves better than this cartooni action drama in which he plays a butt-kicking betan monk protecting a sacred scroll who finds unlikely, and unconvincing, successor in the pic pocket played by Seann William Scott. The aud ence deserves better, too. (At Boston Commo Fenway and suburbs.)

City of Ghosts ★★
Matt Dillon has come up with an interesting subj for his directorial debut. He plays a con man wh after a scam, has fled the States to meet up with partner and mentor (James Caan) in Cambod Dillon's character gets involved in the mentor's n scheme, but considering the inconvenience he ge through in Cambodia—getting beaten, robbed a thoroughly disheartened—it's hard to see why does. The script, cowritten by Dillon and Barry G ford (Wild at Heart), never makes the Dillon-Ca bond feel strong enough to outweigh these obs cles. And the movie is longwinded as well, makin that much harder to care. (At Kendall Square.)

Identity ★★
The strong cast including John Cusack, Ray Liot Amanda Peet and John Hawkes helps, but the p in this thriller by writer-director James Mangold comes more and more arbitrary as it progress That means that the twists in this tale of a bunch travelers stranded at a Nevada motel, who st dying one by one, keep having less and less impa right down to the obligatory, empty twist endi It's good to see the who-dies-next plot done w adults instead of teens for a change, but the s

Malibu's Most Wanted ★★½

Everybody's strapped to a nine iron in the hometown of B-Rad, Jamie Kennedy's amusing white rapper-wannabe. But when his Malibu dad (Ryan O'Neal) runs for governor of California, B-Rad (Bradley is his "slave name," he protests) is deemed an embarrassment. So dad's campaign staff hires two black actors (Anthony Anderson and Taye Diggs) to pose as gangstas, kidnap B-Rad, take him to the hood and "scare the black out of him." The laughs are spotty at times, but they're more plentiful and more clever than anything in Bringing Down the House, that other recent race-relations comedy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Only the Strong Survive ★★½

It's not the style of documentary filmmakers D.A. Pennebaker and Chris Hegedus to do formal interviews or enhance their footage with much background information. But some shaping might have given focus to this meandering series of visits with 1960s soul stars such as Sam Moore, Jerry Butler and the irrepressible Rufus Thomas, who has since died. Some of the footage of recent performances is fine—Moore singing "When Something Is Wrong With My Baby," Mary Wilson doing "Some Day We'll Be Together," Butler on the title song—and the banter between Thomas and his radio partner, Jay Michael Davis, is a hilarious Greek chorus. But literally and musically the movie is all over the map. If you're not already a fan, you probably won't get much out of this; if you are a fan, you'll enjoy much of what's here, but be disappointed by a missed opportunity. (At Kendall Square.)

The Other Network ★★★½

TV executives didn't know what to do with the very funny pilots that make up this great compilation. Most are better than 95 percent of the movie and TV comedy we get shoved down our throats: Heat Vision and Jack, directed by Ben Stiller and starring Jack Black and the voice of Owen Wilson, is a classic sci-fi and action-hero spoof about an ex-astronaut and his talking motorcycle; Lookwell, cowritten by pre–Late Night Conan O'Brien, has a priceless performance by Adam West as an actor who once played a TV detective and now keeps butting in on the police's work; Next! is Bob Odenkirk's hilarious, post-Mr. Show sketch comedy program; and North Hollywood is another appealing square-peg comedy from Judd Apatow (Freaks and Geeks, Undeclared). (At the Coolidge Corner.)

Owning Mahowny ★★★

Director Richard Kwietnowski, who previously made Love and Death on Long Island (about a stuffy author's sudden infatuation with a heartthrob actor), takes us on another intriguing journey through the obsession raging within one man's mind. This time, it's a fastidious assistant bank manager (Philip Seymour Hoffman) with a gambling jones. He starts embezzling money from the bank, so he can gamble to pay off his debts—and then, because he loses more, he embezzles some more, and so on. His quiet desperation has a fascinating car-crash quality, and is all the more compelling because the movie is based on a true story. (At Kendall Square.)

The Real Cancun ★½

This reality-based movie from the folks behind The Real World is based on reality about as much as Chicago was based on the Windy City. The makers selected a group of hormonal 18- to-22-year-olds, sent them on spring break together and let the alcohol flow. You do the math. Of course, they selected mostly jerks for their cast—because that's "interesting"—but the result is a group of people you generally don't care about. So the film ends up being bland—providing neither the tawdry trash promised by the marketing, nor any real emotional drama. And it's about the 19th movie in the last four months to use Nelly's "Hot in Herre" in the soundtrack. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Shape of Things ★★

Neil LaBute's latest play raises interesting questions about the compromises that go into a romantic relationship, but he gives it a clumsy transition to the screen. The mannered performances, unnatural dialogue and casting of actors in their early 30s to play college students all make it hard to get involved in his story of the relationship between an art student (Rachel Weisz) who works hard to make her nebbish boyfriend (Paul Rudd) physically and emotionally "better," and the effect that relationship has on two of his friends (Gretchen Mol, Frederick Weller). LaBute doesn't treat his characters with quite as much contempt as he sometimes has, but they still feel like abstractions rather than anything the least bit real. (At Copley Place.)

X2: X-Men United ★★★

The first one did nothing for me, but the X-Men sequel is a looser and more entertaining experience than its stiff predecessor. Perhaps it's the plot about a government higher-up (Brian Cox) who's determined to start a war that gives the sequel an extra timeliness. Cox, Patrick Stewart and Ian McKellen all give sly performances, Hugh Jackman gets tough-guy laughs as the Eastwood-esque Wolverine, Halle Berry and Famke Janssen kick sci-fi butt, and Alan Cumming has joined the cast as a creepy little mutant. The plot is much more focused and under control than the first time around, and the only real problem here is that the climax drags on, and on. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

English guitar hero Johnny Marr finds his voice and echoes his Manchester past with his new groove-based band, the Healers

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

A British television show once placed Johnny Marr among the "Top Ten Guitar Heroes," alongside such names as Jimi Hendrix, Eric Clapton and Jimmy Page. That might be a stretch for American rock fans, especially those who judge a guitar player on his soloing. But a perusal of Marr's résumé leads to surprises when it comes to the range and weight of his contributions.

As a co-founder of the Smiths in the '80s, Marr wrote all of that band's music. He later played with The The and formed Electronic with ex–New Order frontman Bernard Sumner, a fellow veteran of Manchester, England's influential music scene. He has recorded with Bryan Ferry, Talking Heads, the Pet Shop Boys, Beck and Oasis, performed live with the Charlatans and Neil Finn, and written with Kirsty MacColl and Beth Orton, co-penning their respective singles "Walking Down Madison" and "Concrete Sky."

Johnny Marr combines guitar and vocals with the Healers.

Now, Marr has finally emerged as a solo artist with the Healers, a trio with drummer Zak Starkey (the Who) and bassist Alonza Bevan (ex-Kula Shaker). The group's music is thick, trippy, groove-based rock that variously brings to mind the Smiths, The The, Oasis and the Charlatans—in other words, a good chunk of the Manchester sound that Marr helped shape.

"I'm at this point in my career, or my journey, where I'm fine about doing something that may have a ring or an echo or memory of something that I've done in the past," says Marr, 39, whose band plays the WXRV Riverfest at the MDC Hatch Shell May 24. "After all, it is my sound."

Not that the Healers began that way. The initial plan was for a "very big band with a lot of percussion and very loud synthesizers," he says. "It was a great idea, but I felt it was taking it too far away from being identifiably me."

Marr, in turn, dispensed with another blueprint for the Healers' debut CD, Boomslang. "That was to have a nonlayered and very direct guitar," he says. "I'm glad that the record took a while to make, because as time went on, I dropped that agenda." In the interim, Marr had played with the Charlatans and Finn, and says audience expectations for his signature sound convinced him to orchestrate the new CD with guitar overdubs.

"Some of those Smiths records that I did with [producer] John Porter had 14 guitars on it—and we made it sound like eight!" says Marr, who played several parts on "Caught Up" and other tracks, juxtaposing clean strums, thick riffs, raw slide, wah-wah accents and, on the pulsing, more electronic "You Are the Magic," a rare and slippery guitar solo.

"The best sound in the world is two guitars playing against each other," says Marr, whose group is touring with second guitarist James Doviak, who also helps cover the keyboard parts from the disc. "Three or four guitars all doing the right thing together, for me, is heaven on earth."

The biggest change for Marr with the Healers, however, is his sudden evolution into a lead singer, something he only took on when his bandmates preferred his laconic style to frontmen they were considering. "It's important for me to have the vibe of the vocal in the same place as the music," he says. "I purposely make the lyrics fairly ambiguous, taking the peaks out of the words and melodies, so that it would just flow with the music and have the same kind of feeling. I don't like for vocals to be too action-packed.

"I made a definite decision when I was in my early teens to just stay on the left side of the stage," says Marr, reached at a San Francisco tour stop. "I had strict notions of what made a frontman do what they did. As I got older, I've sort of mutated into one of those horrors. After working with so many people, I just realized if you can sing and write a tune and make a connection with an audience, ripping your shirt off or moonwalking isn't necessarily a requirement."

> "IF YOU CAN SING AND WRITE A TUNE ... RIPPING YOUR SHIRT OFF ISN'T NECESSARILY A REQUIREMENT."

His even-toned vocal style also lends itself to Boomslang's sense of ominous mystique, which extends to its CD title.

"I had a dream about a snake," Marr explains. "The snake was hissing 'I am Boomslang,' and I looked on the Internet, and there is actually a snake called a boomslang, and that really blew my mind. But unfortunately, the story kinda fizzled out, because a friend of mine who's a writer said that he'd been telling me about the boomslang snake a couple years before. So it must have stuck there in the subconscious."

Much like the influences that inform the Healers. iB

Johnny Marr and the Healers play the WXRV Riverfest at the MDC Hatch Shell May 24.

Rick's Tricks

Rick Naples fires up the crowd at Pravda and beyond

From his vantage point in the DJ booth, Rick Naples has witnessed plenty of dramatic changes in Boston nightlife over the past 13 years. Naples has seen different eras of dance music come and go, not to mention venues, DJs and promoters.

Nowadays, Naples presides over one of Boston's best-known dance floors every Saturday night at Pravda 116. "The crowd at Pravda is great," says Naples, "and I think that between the club itself and the music format, it attracts a very diverse group of folks every week. It's a really friendly atmosphere, and the vibe is just amazing! You'll definitely find people dancing on the couches and in the aisles."

Through the years, Naples has mastered a broad range of sounds and styles to suit nearly any crowd or any room. At Pravda 116, clubgoers will find him spinning a pulsing blend of filtered disco and vocal house, occasionally even touching down in tribal house territory. Boston clubbers can also find Naples holding down a weekly residency on Fridays at LaBoom, or making a monthly guest appearance at Sunrise After Hours in Saugus. On Saturday, May 24, join him at Pravda 116 for a special Memorial Day Weekend event. DJ Todd Reeves spins in the lounge.

Pravda 116, 116 Boylston St., Boston (617-482-7799). 10pm-2am. Proper dress, $10. 21+.

DrinkMaster
Bartending School

DrinkMaster is proud to present the finest in professional bartender training! Hundreds of Nightclubs, Bars, Restaurants and Hotels rely on DrinkMaster as a source of professional bartenders. From the high earning potential to the flexible hours, bartending has lots to offer! If you would like to make bartending a reality DrinkMaster's professional and friendly instructors will guide you on your way to a lucrative career in bartending. Courses start every week and weekends.

"The DrinkMaster education was great! I thought all of the teachers were very knowledgeable, especially friendly and fun to work with. After I graduated from DrinkMaster I bartended for the Harbor House Hotel in Nantucket as their pool bartender. I made so much money! It was the best summer job I've ever had."
— Jeffrey "JP" Parker

"I was impressed with the course from the beginning and it certainly prepared me for bartending at The Harvard Club, where I've been bartending since I graduated from DrinkMaster. I was well prepared and confident — I knew exactly what to do on my first day on the job."
— Sue Rushford, Boston

Good Friday...Great Friday! "The Wave"

You: Packed in on the E line at 5:30 pm on April 18. The train was on the outbound side of Copley station. You were wearing a brown leather jacket and have dark hair and a handsome face. You caught my eyes and didn't let go! Me: Sitting on a bench in the station waiting for my train. I was dressed in my play clothes (jeans) and my hair was in a long ponytail. I tried to look away but kept coming back to your gaze. As the train left the station, you waved goodbye. I smiled, blushed and waved too! If you'd like to wave "hello," and I hope that you will, e-mail me.

April Fools Day at Quincy Market

You reminded us of Neal McDonough. You wished Kris a happy birthday (she asked you to) and then invited us to celebrate your birthday the following Thursday. I gave you my card, but never heard from you. Maybe you found what you were looking for at the Rack? If not, maybe you'll give me a call?

Liberals Suck

Is everyone in this town a freaking bleeding-heart liberal Democrat? I guess I should have known, but for crying out loud, I can't walk two feet without being chastised for my conservative beliefs or being looked at like an idiot because I support Bush. All you stuck-up, pretentious, ivory-tower, pipe-smoking, self-righteous, Clinton-loving fascists can kiss my ass! If you left the Commonwealth once in a while you'd find out that a little reason, and a big tax cut, can go a long way.

Laughter Filled Our T

It was April 24, a crowded and entertaining night. You were a Caucasian gal about 5'1" wearing a winterish overcoat and scarf. I was an Asian guy about 5'6" with a black pea coat and light blue beanie cap. You stepped onto a crammed B Line train after a big Celtics playoff win against the Indiana Pacers around the Boylston or Arlington train stop. During the ride, the T conductor gave us humor and gave us laughter throughout the whole ride, culminating with a patronizing wave at those who could not get onto the train around Boston University. While you and I took quick glances and exchanged friendly smiles, I was left sitting there trying to find the best way to start a conversation with you, but could not get anything to sound right in thought. It wasn't until you were about to get off at the corner of Commonwealth and Warren Avenue around 10pm that I was able to stand up to try and greet you with more than a smile, perhaps with a light conversation. If you are interested in meeting for a cup of coffee, or just to hang, I would like to hear from you via e-mail.

The Other Side Cafe and Gorgeous

Second Floor, Other Side Cafe on April 18 at about 6pm. You were there with a note/sketchbook and eating dinner. I was with two friends across the way (who were loudly telling me to go talk to you).Was that a wry smile I saw? You are ephemeral. Drop by the Other Side some other Friday night. I'll try to be there!

Bridal Shower Bingo Author

It was April 27 and you were the maid of honor running your friend's shower...however, you forgot to print out your Shower Bingo cards. You were a very attractive brunette with short hair and a great smile! You were so busy at the time, the few hours you were there, a chance never came about for me to have a few words with you. I just wanted to tell you I've regretted not chatting with you ever since. You were wearing a light green short sleeve sweater and grey pants and if you don't mind my saying...you looked great! I did gather you're quite busy in two weddings coming up, but if you find this message and want to respond, there will one happy face on this end! Here's hoping!

Fell on My Bum

As I was walking to work on the morning of April 30 I experienced an incident that could have only been the result of accumulated bad karma from the entirety of my life. At the intersection of Dartmouth Street and Comm. Ave. I crossed the inbound lane of traffic while there was a pause in the usually steady stream of traffic. Before I could even think about getting to the other side of the street my not-steady-worth-a-damn ankle gave out and I landed in the middle Comm. Ave. without a trace of lucidi In the midst of my dazed and bruise (more ego than bodily injury) state, gentleman's hand reached out to he me while simultaneously fending off oncoming traffic. Unfortunately, due to my confusion, (and typical latene for work), I did not properly thank you for your beyond-kind action. I hope that you, or someone you may have told this war story to, read this and know that I am truly thankful that you were there. I believe that your karma-o-meter must now be topped out and hope that the good fortune is returned to you many tim over! Thanks again!

India on the C Line

If you ride the C Line inbound aroun 6:45 am during the week and then hop on the Red line at Park Street, keep reading. If you are a beautiful young lady with probably an ethnic background tied to India or that ar then you must keep reading becaus it's probably you I'm looking for! M guess is that you are in your mid-2 and working professionally. I have seen you a few times in the morning now, whether you have noticed or n You are not half-asleep or cranky about the commute like the other passengers. Instead you seem so graceful and beautiful while readin book. For all I know you could be in happily committed relationship. Nonetheless, realize that someone finds you very beautiful and would love to talk to you sometime. A gentleman you won't be disappoint with is patiently waiting.

Sexy in South Station

You were dressed to impress, with barettes in your long hair and a nervous look in your changing-col eyes. I was dressed to seduce, with spiky hair, dress shirt, vest and tie Well, that was over two years ago and I'm still impressed, and you're still seduced. I love every part of from the tiny scar at your widow' peak to your cold feets, and everything in between, especially your radiator. In this season whe fell in love (holding on by our teeth!), I sing "Rescue Me" by Madonna to myself and remembe how we said, "Yeah, everything a this applies to us...except the 'res me' part. That's dumb." It still d I love you, Beans!

MAY 14 – 27, 2003

TAURUS APRIL 20-MAY 20

Home may be where the heart is, but right now it's also a pit consuming all the money you can throw that way. "Never enough!" could likewise be the motto of a rambunctious family member. As amusing (to some, not you) as this situation may seem, during the total eclipse on the 15th, your tolerance for the people involved can disappear as quickly and dramatically as the moon. Relax, the very next day your Venus ruler moves into Taurus bearing customary gifts of affection, artistry, pleasure and profit.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Knowing that your retrograde Mercury ruler is going direct on the 20th could shift your focus to the future instead of concentrating on what's happening now. Whether or not that's a mistake, only time will tell. However, since Mercury is tied into the powerful polarity between trailblazing Mars and magnanimous Jupiter in your financial houses, you could get quite excited by the tremendous potential for progress and prosperity generated by their alliance. Where do the Twins fit in?

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

A total lunar eclipse can have a long-range influence on world events and the people involved, but it's the personal life of the ordinary Moon Child that is immediately affected by this phenomenon. Check out where 25 degrees of Scorpio falls on your natal chart, because that's the area in which you'll experience a revelation, a possible struggle and finally, a transformation. If you have Cancer rising, the eclipse occurs in your fifth house of romance, risk, recreation and creations such as your offspring, artwork and performance.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

You're bewitched, bothered or bewildered, but not for much longer. Once impressionable Neptune in your Aquarius house of partners turns retrograde the night of the full moon eclipse, you won't be as receptive to fantasies, fibs and fables. But until then, the fog you've been drifting through might get thicker, the boundaries between you and a loved one blurrier and your ego even more bloated. While Jupiter magnifies the mystical aspects of a close relationship, impulsive Mars can send it over the top.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Tread gingerly this week. What happens in the days before your retrograde Mercury ruler flips on the 20th is repeated, with some variations, in the days that follow. Since the current connections to Mercury are sharpening your perceptions and giving you more physical energy, now would be a good time to investigate a new athletic activity. Read up on the sport, e.g., skydiving, find an instructor, but don't jump out of the plane until Mercury goes direct. Or you could do research for an article instead.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Because the lunar eclipse on the 15th casts its shadow across your Scorpio money house, take time to inspect all financial transactions. Maybe the bank won't lose your deposit, maybe the sales clerk will waken from her stupor before the final tally and maybe you'll remember where you stashed your emergency fund. A lot of action at home, family stuff that could be resolved now that Mars is cutting through layer upon layer of duplicity, the "if only" hypothetical bull being expounded by delusional Neptune.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

The annual Scorpio full moon is weird enough—you usually come across a juicy tidbit you can sink your teeth into—but when it's a total lunar eclipse, a truly mysterious matter can emerge from the darkness. Since Mercury is still retrograde in the sign of your significant others, a buried memory may also surface. Meanwhile, your militant Mars co-ruler is steering you deeper into the fantasy realm of Neptune. This works for despots, dancers and dream analysts; animators and game designers, too. But not you; be careful.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Some Archers might feel the impact in their wallets, others get hit while online or on the road. No matter which aspect of your life is affected by crusading Mars' merger with visionary Neptune, it'll make quite an impression. God, is this the moment you get religion, or will you turn into a garden-variety fanatic? High hopes accompany most everything you do during this odd timeslot. Know that the Scorpio full moon eclipse emphasizes services rendered by and for you, the details of your job description and the co-workers who count.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Your friends and lovers, their allegiances and antipathies, could be creating a mini-crisis that should reach its peak and erupt during the full moon eclipse on the 15th. How involved in their drama do you have to be? If you prefer, n at all. Not that you won't catch some flak, but unless you' done something truly awful—no aspects to your Saturn ruler show anything like that—you can rise above the lunacy. Let the people concerned settle their differences without your input or your money. Sound too idyllic?

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Every now and then you get to enjoy a Don Quixote moment, chance to dream the impossible dream. That may happen on the 14th when visionary Neptune in your sign and Mars, the brave warrior, conspire to transport you beyond the customa bounds of reality. No doubt other people will be drawn to yo aura and your trip, but since there's a total lunar eclipse in t works, try to separate the true seeker from the certifiable crazy. It won't be easy. The Scorpio full moon can have a dramatic impact on your career and family plans.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

If you thought you were hot last week, wait until you see how easily you can cloud men's minds this week. When adventurous Mars meshes with your imaginative Neptune ruler, there are precious few situations you can't envision and endorse. You might also convince an influential group follow your lead. Whatever you do come up with should b very entertaining and, because protective Jupiter is waitin in the wings, quite profitable. The Scorpio full moon eclips may slam a door that was recently opened, a chance to travel someplace mysterious.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

One of those astonishing moments spent in the public eye may be coming up on the 14th. During the once-every-tw years meeting of your crusading Mars ruler and photogen Neptune, you could be surrounded by fans, photographer and a few foes. The Scorpio full moon eclipse the next day intensifies the significance—and for Rams, the financial implications—of whatever happens this week. Don't blo off a chance to cash in on your 15 minutes of fame; just make sure your version of the event is both educational a entertaining.

BUT SOFT, WHAT PARTY IN YONDER BALLROOM RAGES...

A fatal stabbing followed by a double suicide doesn't sound like the most promising material for a love story, but then Shakespeare whipped that scenario into Romeo and Juliet, and a few centuries later, Prokofiev wrote an achingly beautiful ballet score. So when Boston Ballet decided to present it as the finale of its current season, the theme for the annual spring fundraiser was a no-brainer. The result: an enchanted evening.

The Romeo and Juliet Ball—a masked, black-tie hoo-ha held at the Park Plaza—began with cocktails in a re-creation of the Verona street scene where the story opens, except that the vendors were hawking $100 Tiffany charm bracelets (in lieu of raffle tickets for a chance to win a $10,000 watch); other items for sale included box seats at Fenway and a trip to Aspen. Dinner in the Imperial ballroom followed, punctuated by brief performances by members of the company and their students, which presented one guest with the opportunity to remark, "You've gotta admire anyone with a butt that could crack a walnut."

Present and accounted for: ethereal co-chair Trevania Henderson; her adoring other half, John, and her mother, mega-Nashville society glamazon Jane Dudley; the ballet's big kahuna Mikko Nissinen (who was leaving the next day on a four-day trip to Moscow, so it must've been something important); black-sheathed and diamond-bedecked auction chair Eve Rounds; the freakishly attractive Michael Tilley; staunch ballet supporter Cathryn Keith (looking exactly like Lady Capulet); mondo-balletomanes Bill and Susan Poduska; Kay and Peter Lyons; Bob and Marjie Kargman; Channel 5 anchor Kasey Kaufman (who said, "I'll bet I'm the only woman here who raided her daughter's dress-up closet for her outfit"); and one woman who suspected her close friend was wearing blue contact lenses to match her sapphire necklace.

All in all, it was a flawless evening, except that it was board chair Susan Friedman (and not yours truly) who won the raffle prize, but at least everyone went home with a pair of crystal votive holders from Tiffany that are suitable for regifting.

OUT OF AFRICA...

The age-old riddle of how many former heads of state can fit into the Four Seasons ballroom at any given time was finally solved by the black-tie gala capping off the African Presidential Roundtable held by Boston University's African Presidential Archives. The answer, it seems, is seven.

While a chamber music trio offered a sonorous backdrop for the cocktail hour, prominent socialites like Cambridge real estate gazillionaire Marvin Gilmore; New England Home for Little Wanderers honcha Joan Wallace Benjamin and her devastatingly handsome husband, Milton; Beacon Hill dowager empress Smoki Bacon and her royal consort, Dick Concannon; broadcasting babe Karen Holmes Ward; the library's founder and former ambassador to Tanzania, Rev. Charles Stith; his wife, Dr. Deborah Prothrow-Stith; and banking beauty Carol Fulp watched the stately (and fashionably late) arrival of their excellencies Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia; Antonio Manuel Mascarenhas Gomes Monteiro of Cape Verde; Sir Q. Ketumile Masire of Botswana; and Ali Hassan Mwinyi of Tanzania, to name only four.

A sumptuous dinner followed, accompanied by light opera from a lyric soprano. Meanwhile, here's how the big guys fared in three crucial social categories:

Most charming: Jerry Rawlings, the lovably roguish, controversy-courting, half-Scottish former president of Ghana, who invited prominent socialite and social activist Doris Yaffe to visit him in Africa.

Most congenial: Dr. Navinchandra Ramgoolam of Mauritius, who smiled graciously as one guest fumbled over his name like it was a tongue-twister.

Best dressed: Nicephore Soglo of Benin, whose magnificent metallic ceremonial garb could have interrupted flight patterns at Logan.

THE INVITATION DIDN'T MENTION AN ENGAGEMENT RING...

The Westin Hotel ballroom was brimming with goodwill for the Huntington (Theater Company, that is) at Spotlight Spectacular—an elegant drinks-and-dinner affair that attracted the likes of board chairman David Wimberley (the evening's honoree); artistic director and incorrigible scamp Nicholas Martin; arts boosters Ron and Ronni Casty; Clear Channel poobah Tony McLean; white-hot Cambridge architect David Hacin and his de facto husband type person, Tim Grafft; retired art supplies mogul Lionel Spiro and the va-voomalicious Vivian; soul food magnate Darryl Settles; nth-generation portrait photographer Louis Bachrach; hot patootie Jill Goldweitz; philanthropic fun couples Cokie and Lee Perry and Wendy Shattuck and Samuel Plimpton; Back Bay doyenne Rosalie Cohen (sans her collector husband, Bert, who was attending the toy fair in Amsterdam); and others of the sort of people you'd be happy to be seated next to at dinner.

At the African Presidential Roundtable, from top: Maïta Vert and Marvin Gilmore; Doris Yaffe, Charles Stith and Smoki Bacon.

The evening's entertainment, meanwhile, included musical appearances by Tony winner Ron Rifkin (who has appeared on every TV show known to man), comedic genius Andrea Martin (the SCTV alum who played the aunt in My Big Fat Greek Wedding) and always-cast-as-the-sexy-Dad actor Victor Garber (star of the ABC spy series Alias), who dazzled and delighted the audience until it was time to go home.

"I didn't meet my future ex-husband tonight," said one guest, "but I still had a nice time." IB

MODEL CITIZENS

In the April 30 IMPROPER, you guys have a couple photos of this really tall skinny girl with cornrows and a Gucci'd out guy carrying shopping bags on Newbury Street. A friend and I passed them on the street and made fun of them for about three blocks. Granted, this was just to make ourselves feel slightly less dowdy and was followed by about four more blocks of self-degradation. But when the magazine came out, it did make me feel better to see that they were on a photo shoot and not just "that" cool naturally.

It is the same feeling I get when I walk past the Armani Café in a pair of Old Navy capris: just not cool enough.

—SARAH WEBB

THAT'S THE TICKET

I found it rather amusing that on the cover of your April 30 issue, one of the concierges had a pair of World Series tickets in his breast pocket. Which team are you implying will be going to the World Series this year? What do you know that the rest of us, and the Red Sox bullpen, don't know?

—SAM DOUGLAS
Brighton

Editor's note: The tickets in the pocket of the concierge are for the World of Wheels car show. Don't worry, we're not jinxing the Sox's World Series ambitions. But if you'd like tickets to the World Series of custom-car shows, maybe we can hook you up.

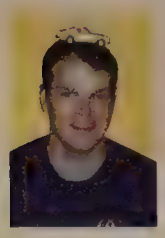
CONTRIBUTOR

EZRA DYER



You may know Ezra Dyer as a staff writer and humor columnist here at the IMPROPER. But he's also a huge car nut who drives a '91 Saab that's rollin' on Kumhos. Lately Dyer has been capitalizing on his car-craziness by contributing to Automobile magazine. Last February he penned a feature story on buying a $350 Cadillac Eldorado and "donating" it to a historical society in Maine for use as a target at its annual machine gun expo, and his car reviews can be found on Automobile's Web site (www.automobilemag.com). We had to twist his arm, but we got him to drive a few high-powered convertibles for this issue's totally topless feature story, "Dashing Droptops." Turn to page 18 to read about eight great reasons to have a driver's license.

FROM THE EDITOR

SUMMER IN THE CITY

Even though my school days are now a distant memory and summers no longer mean three months of freedom from schedules and responsibility, I feel a sense of joy as that first sweet month of summer approaches. Like many of you, I've got plans for getting out of town a few times this season to soak up warmth and scenery and recapture that school's-out feeling.

But the working world's realities mean that many of us will be spending most of summer's too short hours in the city. Lucky for us, there's plenty going on in the Greater Boston area, and summer fun close to home provides the theme for this issue.

The editorial staff has compiled quick guides to summer festivals and to beaches close enough for a day trip, and music columnist Paul Robicheau outlines outdoor concert highlights throughout the summer. Meanwhile, staff writer Ezra Dyer fulfills his longstanding yen to write a car feature for the IMPROPER with a four-pager on hot new convertibles, just in time for top-down season. If ten-speeds are more your style (and/or your price range), check out Susan Abbattista's story on urban biking—with a sidebar on off-road paths for more leisurely riding. Finally, tourism experts from the Cape and Islands discuss the newest attractions at these favorite weekend spots. All told, there's enough in these pages to keep your summer calendar solidly booked.

YOU GOTTA HAVE FAITH

I was disappointed in the mistake that appeared in the April 30 edition of the IMPROPER. The article entitled "Belting it Out" by Daniel Schulman stated that the Ecko Lounge has karaoke songs in Chinese, Japanese and Korean. That fact is wrong. I went to Ecko Lounge with friends. We planned to sing in Japanese and Korean, specifically because the IMPROPER stated that the bar had songs in those two languages. The Ecko Lounge has songs in only English and Chinese. We were extremely disappointed and unable to sing. In the past I've found your magazine to be enjoyable and accurate. Unfortunately, my friends and I will no longer trust the words you print. I suggest better research and fact-checking.

—JAMIE SOOHOO

Editor's note: Ecko Lounge owner Jeff Tam confirms that our facts were correct: In addition to about 2,000 Chinese titles, the Ecko Lounge offers about 400 songs in Korean and 50 in Japanese, and they even have a separate machine for the Korean songs. However, says Tam, "Unless someone asks for a Korean book, they might not see it." So go back, ask for the Korean or Japanese song books, and belt it out.

IT MADE ME FEEL BETTER TO SEE THAT THE PEOPLE ON NEWBURY STREET WERE ON A PHOTO SHOOT AND NOT JUST "THAT" COOL NATURALLY.

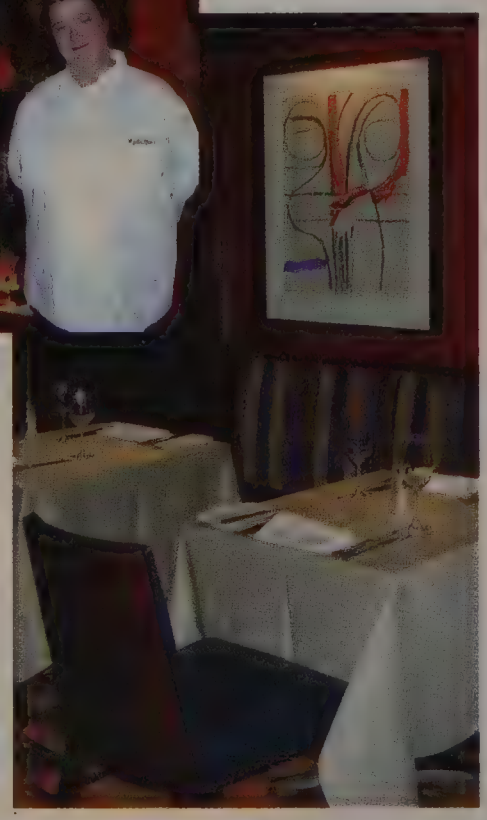
SIMPLY HEAVENLY

Pair Lydia Shire of Biba, Pignoli and Locke Ober fame with Tim Lynch, the über successful entrepreneur behind Grill 23 and Harvest, and what do you get? A culinary version of gloria in excelsis Deo—Latin for "glory to God in the highest." Shire and Lynch's lavish new restaurant, Excelsior, opened May 22, taking over Biba's much-coveted space overlooking the Public Garden—and once you get a look at what they've created, you'll want to break into song ("Angels We Have Heard on High" might be appropriate).

Lydia Shire

While you're dining, you can watch the wine steward climb up ladders to fetch bottles of wine (from a collection of 7,000) through the glass walls of the restaurant's centerpiece: a three-level wine cellar by renowned restaurant designer Adam Tihany. The menu features one mouthwatering dish after another, with appetizer offerings of foie gras steak with extra-bitter chocolate and fresh cherries, and one-minute spaghetti with one ounce of Osetra caviar. (Perhaps the price tag of the latter—$85—might sway the decision.) Indeed, the prices aren't understated, but anyone who's dined with chef Shire knows she's not one to show restraint.



The kitchen is fully equipped with a wood-burning oven for housemade breads and gourmet pizzas, along with a vertical oven for dishes like jasmine-spiced duck and rack of lamb. Shire's two favorites, however, are the "man's steak," which comes with Roquefort butter petticoat and beet lace, and the "lady's steak" made with crisped marrow, wild leeks and hot green garlic. But Shire adds that patrons should feel free to gender swap. 272 Boylston St., Boston (617-426-7878).

LOOK OUT, REMY

Have you ever listened to announcers call a baseball game and said to yourself, "I am witty, knowledgeable and capable of contributing to several hours of spirited banter. Why am I not doing that?" Well, June 4 at the Place, five finalists in the Sam Adams/NESN Announcer for an Inning Contest will vie for a chance to become a Red Sox announcer. Seven sports-savvy judges, including Bob Lobel of WBZ and Butch Stearns of WFXT, will rate the would-be Sean McDonoughs on their game as they each call an inning of that night's match-up against the Pittsburgh Pirates. The winner will broadcast the seventh inning of the June 10 Sox-Cardinals game on NESN for 300,000 viewers. Take notes, Ben Affleck.—Ezra Dyer

DATING FOR DOLLARS

Melissa Wehrman

Yet another Bostonian has fallen into the irresistible abyss of reality TV. Brookline resident Melissa Wehrman makes her television debut on NBC's For Love or Money as one of 15 women competing for the affections of a studly Dallas lawyer. The premise: The woman who's picked wins the guy...and $1 million. The twist: The guy doesn't know about the money. Wehrman, a 25-year-old graphic designer for the Museum of Fine Arts, answered a few of our questions about the show before the series premiere June 2.

IB: What prompted you to try out?
MW: I had just stopped seeing this guy. He was totally wrong for me, so my friend said, "Why don't we try to let NBC find a guy for you?" I figured I needed a vacation anyway.
IB: What do you think about the reality TV phenomenon?
MW: I think it's pretty funny. It's all the same thing with a twist here, a twist there.
IB: Did you know going into it that there was $1 million at stake?
MW: Before we knew that there was a million-dollar prize, it was supposed to be like The Bachelor. The first day of taping, they told us the winner would also get $1 million. So then it was a whole fight for the man and the money. There were a few people who started playing a game right then and there.
IB: Was it hard to get along with the other women?
MW: It really wasn't. Obviously there was the token flaky girl and the token bitch and the token naive one. But it was really a good group.
IB: Why in your opinion, should people watch this show?
MW: There's definitely a lot of drama. It wasn't all lovey dovey and "I'm trying to fall in love with this man." There were definitely other issues, like greed.
IB: Where will you be when it airs?
MW: I will actually be at Tonic in Allston. They agreed to play it for me and my friends, and I want everyone to watch it with me so I can say, "Now this is what I really said."
IB: What do you think about the Boston singles scene?
MW: The kind of guy who approaches me is the kind that approaches every woman. And I work at the Museum of Fine Arts—we say it's all women and gay men.
IB: Has the experience changed your romantic outlook?
MW: No, I'm the same jaded person I'll always be, but there could be surprises around the corner.

CLEAN AS A WHISTLE

While walking down Newbury Street last Saturday, I spotted a street sale of cheap jewelry, sunglasses and small paintings—all things I'll never need. But then I saw something that really spoke to me: a woman selling handmade soap. The soaps were intricately shaped and smelled like nature at its purest. The woman turned out to be Liann Graf, founder of Scentsible Soaps, a company that she started two years ago in Newburyport. The soaps are made with extra-virgin olive oil, and Graf grows many of the ingredients—namely fruits and veggies—in her own backyard. My favorites are Rose Garden, Goat's Milk & Calendula, and the Gardener's Friend, which has pumice in it to scrub away dirt and grass stains. The soaps are $3.95 each and come in all kinds of shapes like bumble bees, hearts and ladybugs. www.ScentsibleSoapCo.com.

Tasty Tidbits

TRENDY TEA

Krispy Kreme Mondays...To celebrate the much anticipated opening of Krispy Kreme Doughnuts in Medford June 24, the Oak Bar is offering an espresso martini, served with a glazed Krispy Kreme doughnut, Monday evenings June 2-30. The cost is $14 (and no, you can't skip the martini and purchase the doughnut separately). Our question is, Will the Fairmont Copley Hotel post a neon red sign that says "Hot"? 138 St. James Ave., Boston (617-267-5300).

Not Your Average Joe...Speaking of doughnuts, everyone has their favorite Dunkin' Donuts, where the line moves fast and service pros wouldn't dare pass off hazelnut as French vanilla. Now the best of the best have been identified. Nine teams from local branches competed in Dunkin's Speed of Service Championship in West Roxbury May 14. Each team had 10 minutes to complete 18 orders and were judged on speed, accuracy and courtesy. And, as urban law dictates, the grass is always greener in the suburbs—not one of the competing teams was Boston-based. The first place bounty of $15,000 went to the team from Westwood's 915 High St. location, while a Burlington shop took home $6,000 for second place.

Trendy Tea...Somehow, somewhere, tea cut its ties with the prim, proper and weak of stomach, reinventing itself as the "it" drink of global trendsetters. Boba (cold black, jasmine or green tea with cream, sugar and marble-sized tapioca balls at the bottom) is already all the rage in Los Angeles and New York, and now Boston's first all-Boba tea house, Cassava Lounge, is slated to open the second week of June on Boylston Street near Mass. Avenue. Co-owners and MIT grads Ann Hsing and David Park became addicted to the sweet libations after a summer spent in L.A. and decided to test the market in Boston. Boba is already a hit in Chinatown, but Hsing intends to make it mainstream. The menu includes milk and fruit-flavored teas, slushees and Asian shaved ice, all with tapioca balls, which you suck up through thick straws. 1076 Boylston St., Boston. www.cassavalounge.com.

Cheap eats at Coogan's

Arrr, Matey...If you're a fan of the Sports Depot in Allston you'd better make a visit soon, because the venerable sports bar and restaurant is in double-overtime. The Depot closes in early June and when the restaurant reopens in August its motto will have changed from "America's Favorite Sports Grill" to "Bring the Whole Family Down...Just for the Halibut!" That's right, Captain Fishbones is adding an Allston location to its Marina Bay establishment, and Sports Depot will be added to our list of sad farewells. 353 Cambridge St., Allston. www.captainfishbones.com.

Cheap Eats...In the name of keeping up with the Dow Joneses, Coogan's is offering an appetizer special that fluctuates with the market. It's simple really: If the market's up, apps are half-price; if it's down, free appetizer buffet for all. 171 Milk St., Boston (617-451-7415). Daily, 5-7 pm, through May 30. —Ezra Dyer, Erin Hagedorn, Jessica Iredale and Julie Short

•Hopkinton State Park. Swim, hike the trails, paddle a canoe, bicycle or ride horseback through the 1,450 acres of parkland. Route 85, Hopkinton (508-435-4303).

•Walden Pond State Reservation. See Henry David Thoreau's inspiration for his book Walden by swimming in the glacial kettle hole pond, hiking the trails or stopping by a replica of Thoreau's home in the woods. 915 Walden St. (off Route 2), Concord (508-369-3254).

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Bright Lights, Big City...A new nightclub recently turned up on our radar. The Financial District's Vivid Lounge set up shop mid-May upstairs from, and under the same ownership as, the Exchange. The front room is a mellow lounge with tables, bar seating and a full menu, while the back encourages a more animated crowd to hit the dance floor. Looks like two is better than one: Manager Brent Crouch says the brightly colored lounge atmosphere has "two rooms, two DJs, two different kinds of feel." 148 State St., Boston (617-726-7601).

Geese Be Gone..."No Fowl!" Is the Boston Parks and Recreation Department's new war cry aimed at the flocks of Canadian geese that chow down (and, shall we say, "let loose"?) on the Common and the Public Garden.

As of May 12, a professional dog handler and his trained Border collies have been on call to drive the unwanted geese away. The birds are charged with overt aggression (chasing park patrons) and damaging park lawns with their droppings. Acting parks commissioner Antonia Pollack claims the geese have overstayed their welcome, and the dog solution has been deemed humane and effective by the MSPCA, PETA, GeesePeace and the Mass Audubon Society.

Headliners...The world of hairstyling has carved out its own curious niche in American culture—even sparking a cult following for cinematic spoofs like Blow Dry, The Big Tease and Shampoo. Now local stylist John William of South Boston's Mitchell John Salonere is hoping to add another film to the list. In early March, he teamed up with Rockydog Productions to begin work on a hairstyling documentary, The Mane Project, which chronicles aspects of hairstyling from the biggest hair shows in the country to alternative treatments for baldness. The crew is currently filming around the country and hopes to wrap it up soon.

Aw, Snap!...According to Polaroid, only 14 percent of pictures taken with digital cameras are ever printed. Polaroid plans to change that (and hopefully earn some much-needed money) with new digital printing kiosks, which are making their national debut in Boston-area Targets and Noble's Camera stores right about now. The kiosks can turn your camera's binary code into snazzy pictures in less than two minutes, and the prints are water-resistant, tear-proof and fingerprint-resistant. In fact, this sounds like the quickest, easiest way to get a snapshot since the Polaroid.

Dubious Distinction...One drive through the Big Dig and you'd bet that Boston has the worst drivers around. You're right, according to the new Nerves of Steel aggressive driver survey sponsored by the Steel Alliance. Drivers across the country were polled to find out how they ranked in terms of safety, rudeness and aggressiveness. Out of 19 cities, Boston came in second to last overall (Chicago was dead last). Some of the more interesting findings: 64 percent of Boston drivers admit to driving at least 10 miles above the speed limit; 36 percent double park; and 45 percent admit to committing at least four aggressive driving acts in one month. Surprised? Probably not. But at least it's nice to know that we beat New York in something.—E.D., E.H., J.I. and J.S.

TAKE IT EASY

Looking forward to a vacation is the best part. It's all downhill once you're there.

Vacations depress me. I'm still not over the spring break trip I took four years ago during my senior year in college. I had so much fun that I was catatonic for several weeks after returning from Nassau. That was an especially bad case of vacation depression, because not only was my vacation over, but I was acutely aware that I would never again be a college student on spring break. If I ever went back, I would be the spring break equivalent of Matthew McConaughey's character, Wooderson, in Dazed and Confused, a scuzzy old guy cruising the metaphorical high-school parking lot: "That's what I like about college girls on spring break. I keep getting older, they stay the same age."

If you can't watch a Girls Gone Wild video without crying, you've obviously got problems, so I recently decided to confront my demons by going to Key West with Lady Liz.

Key West confirmed a theory I've developed over my past several trips: You can truly enjoy only the first day of your vacation. That's when the aggravating travel is behind you and the happy promise of several days of carefree bliss stretch before you. You turn on the Weather Channel that first morning not to get your own forecast but to mock the sorry, pathetic souls slogging through dirty puddles to their bleak miserable jobs instead of sipping margaritas at the edge of the ocean. Life is good. But the clock is ticking, even then.

On the second day of your vacation the end still seems distant, but you've already burned 24 precious hours. You review the first day and decide how you might maximize your enjoyment of the remaining days. Should you sleep in, or is that a waste of your limited time? What's your goal, to relax or to experience a new place to the fullest extent possible? And did that girl at the kayak-rental place really laugh when you put down your Celtics-logo credit card? What's so funny about having a Celtics card? They give you a free T-shirt when you sign up.

By the penultimate day of your trip, you're drinking heavily (OK, maybe you were drinking heavily all along) in a vain attempt to push the impending end of your vacation from your consciousness. I sat there on the beach, gazing out at the ocean and thinking about how the next day I'd be back in Siberia. Liz put to words another thought that had been running through my head, namely "That girl on the towel next to us has a really good body to be wearing that thong." As an aside, it's the best thing ever when your girlfriend pronounces physical judgment on another girl, because then you have carte blanche to take a gander yourself. Just remember to agree with whatever she said. If you can't remember what she said because your brain heard "That thong on the thong is really thongy thong thong thong," then, "What a ho" is typically an acceptable response.

On the way back, Liz and I spent a good portion of our three-hour layover in Miami sitting outside. After eating at Chili's—I had fajitas with a side order of grim resignation—we wandered out to the employee bus stop to soak up our remaining precious moments of 90-degree weather. We sat there for about an hour with flight attendants and baggage-handling guys while buses pulled up and belched carcinogenic diesel exhaust in our sunburned faces. But we were still on vacation and it was beautiful, warm Florida bus exhaust.

Not surprisingly, vacation depression becomes most acute upon your return. The tendency to make comparisons to what you were doing the previous week is a common symptom of this stage of the affliction. As in, "At this time last week, I was driving a convertible through the Keys on my way to get lunch under palm trees at an outdoor restaurant on the Gulf of Mexico. Now I'm eating a burrito at Souper Salad." The terrible thing is, you usually love eating burritos at Souper Salad. But your vacation has corrupted you. Nothing is fun anymore, not compared with your vacation.

YOU CAN TRULY ENJOY ONLY THE FIRST DAY OF YOUR VACATION. BUT THE CLOCK IS TICKING EVEN THEN

The solution is to realize that vacations are ultimately depressing, expensive and unfairly color your everyday existence. The next time someone tells you about the great vacation they're about to take, act like you really envy them. Say, "Oh, I hate you," and "I hope you get cavity-searched" and other nice things that will make the person feel like they're really making you jealous. Then go to Souper Salad and enjoy your burrito.

TAYLOR TWELLMAN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOEL BENJAMIN

The New England Revolution's star forward, Taylor Twellman (No. 20), was born and raised in St. Louis, the son of a professional soccer player and grandson of a pro baseball player. After graduating from St. Louis University High School, he attended the University of Maryland for two years, where he was Soccer America's Freshman of the Year and a two-time All-ACC selection. After two seasons, he moved to Germany to play for TSV 1860 Munich of the German Bundesliga. At age 20, he was the team's youngest player, appearing in more than 40 games. Selected second in Major League Soccer's 2002 draft, he returned to the U.S. to play for the Revolution.

Jonathan Soroff: Your name's a bit soap opera–ish, isn't it?

Taylor Twellman: I got a lot of "That's a girl's name" when I was a kid, but my parents showed me the baby book they got my name from and it was under the boys' names.

JS: Would you ever marry a woman named Tyler?

TT: [Laughs.] No. Never.

JS: OK, most important question: Your grandfather played for the Yankees....

TT: And the Detroit Tigers and the St. Louis Browns...

JS: But you're a Red Sox fan, right?

TT: Oh, yeah. My Little League team was named the Red Sox.

JS: It seems everyone in your family is a professional-level athlete: Your grandfather played baseball, your father was a pro soccer player, your uncle's on the PGA tour. What if you had a kid who was a bookworm and hated sports?

TT: Wouldn't bother me one bit.

JS: Is 20 your lucky number?

TT: It was my father's first professional number.

JS: Very cool. Now, you play forward. Would you describe yourself as a forward person?

TT: Yes, definitely. I'm outgoing. I like to stir stuff up. Everyone knows where I stand.

JS: When you played in Europe, were you a big star over there?

TT: No. I was just one of the guys. I wasn't the best player on the team. I was playing with 29 other guys who were just as good if not better.

JS: But don't soccer players get more recognition over there?

TT: Well, I wasn't a star personally, but just the mystique of being a professional soccer player in Europe, yeah, definitely, they're more recognized there than here.

JS: Favorite thing about Munich?

TT: The clubs. The nightlife.

JS: Favorite thing about Boston?

TT: The Red Sox. Fenway Park.

JS: Favorite snack at Gillette Stadium?

TT: Oh, I don't even have to eat it, it's just the smell of McDonald's right in the end zone. That smell of a Big Mac as you're getting ready to warm up is just such a tease.

JS: How about a pet peeve with the fans?

TT: They're not loud enough. Sometimes, they're just too quiet.

JS: One perk that professional basketball, baseball or football players get that you wish pro soccer players got in this country?

TT: I don't know if I'm necessarily jealous of their celebrity, but I guess the perk of knowing that this job is going to take care of you for the rest of your life.

JS: So you've got to think about a career after soccer?

TT: Most definitely. Unless you're playing in Europe.

JS: In the 1999 World Youth Championship, you won something called the Bronze Ball?

TT: [Laughs.] Actually, it's the Bronze Boot, which you get for the third most goals in the tournament. They do have a Bronze Ball, but that's a completely different award.

JS: I don't think I want to know about that.

TT: [Laughs.] Well, they don't have a Blue Ball, so we're OK.

TT: Soccer players do it with excitement.

TT: Legs.

JS: Do you get regular pedicures?

TT: No. But I have had one, and they said for a professional athlete I have decent feet.

JS: Worst injury you've ever sustained playing soccer?

TT: Breaking my nose in two spots.

JS: What were you doing, heading a ball?

TT: No, a goalie punched me. [Laughs.]

JS: Speaking of which, don't we need some soccer hooligans in this country?

TT: Definitely.

JS: Yeah, a bunch of rowdy yahoos who drink too much and start brawling...

TT: Well, I don't necessarily advocate the drinking and brawling, but the rowdy part, definitely!

JS: How do you recover after a game?

TT: Sleep and massage. The night after a game, it's hard to sleep, but the night after that, I'll sleep anywhere from 10 to 12 hours.

JS: Secret vice?

TT: I can't reveal that.

JS: What other sports do you play?

TT: Golf. That's my relaxation. I'm embarrassed to tell you my handicap right now is a 6 or a 7.

JS: That's nothing to be ashamed of.

TT: It used to be a 2 or 3. I don't get to play a lot.

JS: Are you a player with the ladies?

TT: No. Actually, I'm engaged to my high school sweetheart from St. Louis.

JS: One player from the Boston Breakers you'd never want to go up against?

TT: Jena Kluegel.

TT: FIFA 2003 for Playstation 2.

JS: Are you a natural blond?

TT: Yes. It's funny. Only in Boston do people ask me if I bleach my hair. If you saw my mother, you'd understand.

JS: Turn-ons?

TT: Dancing. Perfume. Brunettes.

JS: Turn-offs?

TT: Bad teeth. Bad breath. B.O. Loudness, obnoxiousness. 'Cuz I'm loud.

JS: Boxers or briefs?

TT: Briefs.

JS: One thing that would surprise me about the Revolution's locker room?

TT: [Laughs.] How easygoing we are. Unlike other professional athletes, anyone could come in that locker room and feel comfortable.

JS: If Playgirl asked you to pose naked, would you?

TT: Nope.

JS: Most embarrassing thing in your life?

TT: Probably the size of my head. It's a size 8 1/2, and people are always telling me I have a large head.

JS: I don't think that's what they mean. So why doesn't soccer have scantily clad cheerleaders?

TT: I don't think there's enough time in the game. I guess at halftime you could, but it's not like other sports, where there are time-outs and other stuff. In soccer, it's a continuous game, so there really isn't much opportunity for that, although it would probably bring in some more fans.

JS: Last question: If you had to kiss one of your teammates, who would it be and why?

TT: [Laughs.] I think Adin Brown, because I think we've done it before, at a bar or something. IB

dashing DROPTOPS

PUT THE TOP DOWN AND HIT THE ROAD WITH FOUR CONVERTIBLES THAT WILL HELP MAKE THE MOST OF YOUR SUMMER

BY EZRA DYER

Given the Arctic blasts and extreme heatwaves that characterize New England weather, you see a surprising number of convertibles tooling around our city. That's partly due to the fact that convertibles are generally no longer the leaky, drafty, summer-only toys they once were. Many modern droptops are designed to be driven year-round—the Audi A4 Cabriolet even comes with a ski pass-through to the trunk. Four-season practicality aside, however, this is the time of year when convertible drivers remember why they paid a premium for a car with a retractable roof. On a day when the sun is shining and the temperature is right, driving with the top down provides a 360-degree rush that a mere sunroof just can't match.

With those days in mind, we give you four distinct options for maximizing summertime driving fun: the Audi A4 Cabriolet, Chevrolet Corvette 50th Anniversary Edition, Jaguar XKR and Ford Thunderbird are all either new or significantly improved for 2003, and all offer their own unique approach to getting a tan while driving. So pick your destination, put on your favorite CD and choose your weapon.

2003 FORD THUNDERBIRD

As a 20-something male, I'm not supposed to want this car. According to marketers, guys my age should be salivating over a Honda Element or a Subaru WRX STi or a Mitsubishi Lancer Evo. I should want something that's either fast and furious or SUV-ish and versatile. The Ford Thunderbird is none of those things. There's no C-130-sized wing on the back, no interior AC outlets to power my portable tattoo needle, no space for extreme-sports gear. The styling evokes an era before my time. But I still want one.

Price: $41,690

Competitors: In this case, there are no direct competitors. The T-Bird has a nice niche to itself. So... a small boat, down payment on a second home?

Year-round pros and cons: Traction control, heated seats, heated wiper park, available hardtop. But it is a powerful rear-driver, not the best setup in snow. B-

Destination: Newport, R.I.—beach or golf by day, profiling by night

Driving music: Billy Joel's Greatest Hits

The T-Bird's cool transcends demographics, which became clear one day as I engaged in the game of meter-hopping every two hours and ended up talking about the car with passersby each time I got in. The Thunderbird has been back for more than a year (it was reintroduced as a 2002), but it still draws attention from onlookers of all ages. At one point I paused in the middle of putting the top up to answer questions from a guy who wanted to know what kind of car it was. When I replied "Ford Thunderbird," he said, "I remember those from the early '60s. They were pretty sporty." I told him that they still are. Another time, I found a group of younger construction workers standing around the car as they ate their lunch. They wanted to know how it drives. Note to the ladies: If you want to meet guys, it appears that a Thunderbird is the second-best thing to a puppy.

For 2003, Ford wisely left the styling alone but made meaningful upgrades to the engine and interior. The two well-bolstered seats are now available in saddle leather (with saddle accents on the steering wheel and shift knob), and underhood the 3.9 liter V-8 gets a 23-horsepower boost, bringing the total to 280. Ford promotes the T-Bird as a relaxed boulevard cruiser, but with 280 horsepower it's capable of showing its '50s-style round taillights to many a stoplight challenger.

At $41,690 with the swanky saddle interior and manumatic transmission, the Thunderbird also qualifies as a bargain. But don't expect used prices to drop too dramatically, as Ford has already decided to cancel production in either 2005 or 2006. I'm sure that's a purely profit-related decision, but it's a nice perk for Thunderbird owners because their car will remain exclusive. Unlike the new Beetle, Mini and other reborn blasts from the past, this will always be a rare 'Bird.

2003 AUDI A4 CABRIOLET

Normally, stringing together the words "front-wheel drive," "automatic" and "six-cylinder" causes me to start pondering more interesting topics, such as why my belly-button lint sometimes doesn't match the color of my shirt. But in this case, the A4 Cabriolet's three-liter six-cylinder cranks out a respectable 220 horsepower, and Audi's continuously variable transmission (CVT) is a technological breakthrough that mimics both the performance and gas mileage of a manual.

Basically, a CVT is like having an automatic transmission with infinitely variable ratios between first and top gears. So however hard you hit the throttle, the transmission always picks the best ratio to send you on your way.

The CVT exposes an ingrained driving habit that you might not know you have: applying the gas until you hear the revs drop, indicating that you have hit high gear. Particularly if you're used to driving an automatic, your brain is tuned to interpret that drop of revs as a signal—it's time to step off the gas; you've merged. With the A4's CVT, that signal never comes. The engine just winds up and stays there until you let up on the gas or the speed limiter kicks in at 130 mph. That quirk means that you'll learn to devote more attention to the speedometer, because lacking an aural reference point, you'll find yourself accelerating to illegal speeds in a hurry.

Novel transmission aside, the rest of the A4 Cabriolet is pretty sweet as well. Its interior, as in all Audis, is gorgeous and high-quality. The exterior looks sharp, too. It's understated and classy, yet chiseled, a bit like the Old Man of the Mountain once was.

With front-wheel drive and automatic transmission as the only drivetrain, the A4 Cabriolet isn't designed to be a screaming sports car. It will, however, cart four people around in style (but only two in comfort—those back seats are pretty small). And if you insist on having your convertible with a gutsy, six-speed turbocharged engine and all-wheel drive, Audi would be happy to show you something in a TT.

2003 CHEVROLET CORVETTE 50TH ANNIVERSARY EDITION

Confession: I drove the 50th Anniversary Corvette convertible for only about 50 feet. That was last fall, at the International Motor Press Association Test Days, where a slew of manufacturers line up their cars and let egghead journalists flog them around Pocono Raceway in Pennsylvania. I was idling through the pits to take a lap when a red-faced gentleman jumped in front of me and began plastering the windshield with froth and spittle. Eventually I gathered that there was a line for the Vette and I'd usurped this man's spot. I climbed out and let him take the car, fearing that otherwise, he would chase me down, climb onto the trunk and try to kill me like the evil Terminator in Terminator 2. The amazing thing to me about that confrontation was that the Corvette would provoke such apoplexy even when parked beside the latest toys from Mercedes, BMW, Jaguar and Bentley. When, later on, I got to drive a 50th Anniversary coupe (which shares the convertible's key features) for more than 50 feet, I realized why I'd been carjacked at Pocono. This thing is hella fun.

The 50th Anniversary Edition differentiates itself cosmetically from the standard Corvette with a special dark-red color, unique wheels and a shale-colored interior. But the most important component of the 50th Anniversary is its magnetic selective ride control suspension, a system that uses magneto-rheological fluid in the shock absorbers to constantly adjust the car's ride and handling response as you drive. This setup also features a switch on the console that varies the ride between comfort and performance settings. Most of the time I didn't notice much difference between the two modes, but a ride over the donkey trail that is the Tobin Bridge convinced me of its effectiveness. Flipping the switch to the comfort setting over those rapid-fire bumps was like sending an invisible steamroller out ahead to flatten the road. Leave the sport mode for the track.

Other than its innovative suspension, which will also appear on the next-generation Vette and the Cadillac XLR, the 50th Anniversary is similar to any other Corvette. It offers world-class performance, great value and an interior that could be better. The Vette is like an incorrigible college buddy: It may get more sophisticated as time goes by, but at heart it's still a party animal. Even after 50 years.

2003 JAGUAR XKR CONVERTIBLE

So you're in the market for a sporting motorcar. The $86,000 Mercedes SL500 offers only 302 horsepower and, let's face it, sometimes gets bumped from the prime parking spaces in front of the Four Seasons. The 493-horsepower, $113,000 AMG version of the SL is just a bit over the top. Thankfully there's some middle ground, in the form of the 390-horsepower, $95,000 Jaguar XKR.

The Jag doesn't pack the technological might of the Benz, but it does acquit itself well for a six-year-old model. Gadget-lovers will appreciate the adaptive cruise control, rain-sensing wipers and GPS navigation system (you half-expect Austin Powers' boss, Basil Exposition, to pop up on the nav system's in-dash screen and interrupt your trip route with a mission to apprehend Dr. Evil). The supercharged V-8 was enlarged to 4.2 liters for 2003, and the automatic transmission gained an extra gear, for a total of six. The styling has left well enough alone, which is a good thing. Even six years into its run, the XK's curvaceous lines look great and will be a tough act to follow when the next version arrives in 2006.

The XKR's interior is a comfy cocoon of burl walnut and leather, but the rear seats won't be of much use unless you find Lara Flynn Boyle and Calista Flockhart hitchhiking.

The XKR isn't offered with a manual transmission, which speaks to its overall demeanor. It's fast (0-60 in 5.3 seconds, according to Jaguar), handles great with its optional and awesomely expensive 20-inch wheels ($6,000) and stops with the assurance that comes with having gigantic Brembo brakes at each corner. But while it's capable of putting up sports-car numbers, it's not really about using that capability, old chap. It's about knowing you have it. And knowing that when you pull up to the valet at Mistral, that SL500 out front is getting bumped around the corner. iB

2004 Chevy SSR

Is it a car? Is it a truck? Who cares? The SSR arrives this summer with a retractable hardtop and the 290 horsepower 5.3-liter V-8 from Chevy's truck line. Hmmm, a retro-styled, V-8–powered, rear-wheel-drive, automatic-only convertible priced around $40,000. It seems the Thunderbird might have its first direct competitor.

2004 Nissan 350Z Roadster

Nissan's 350Z has been a hit, so kudos to Nissan for not waiting several years to come out with the convertible, a la the Volkswagen Beetle. The droptop's interior has been spiced up with optional burnt-orange seats (Nissan points out that a convertible's interior becomes a part of its exterior when the top is down), and the power top raises and lowers in about 20 seconds. Like its coupe kin, the Roadster should be a lot of car for the money, with the same 287-horsepower V-6 and standard or automatic transmission. Now if they'd just take the roof off the 350Z's even better-looking corporate sibling, the Infiniti G35 Coupe.

On-sale date: Summer 2003

2004 Mercedes CLK Cabriolet

The successor to the popular first-generation CLK is another classy four-seat cruiser. The upmarket V-8 model replaces the previous car's 4.3-liter with the 302-horsepower 5.0-liter engine that appears in every Mercedes vehicle with the number "500" in its moniker, such as the SL500. The CLK500 will be nearly $30,000 cheaper than an SL, and it has nifty features like Keyless Go (leave the key in your pocket and push a button on the dash to start the car) and seating for four. Potential SL500 buyers might want to consider buying a CLK500 and spending the difference on the upcoming Mini Cooper convertible, due next year.

On-sale date: Late summer 2003

2004 Saab 9-3 Convertible

Saab convertibles have always been popular in this region for their all-weather capabilities and strong performance. The new-generation 9-3's wheels-at-the-corners look gives the convertible an aggressive mien, and Saab's usual cornucopia of safety features includes pop-up rollover bars behind the rear seats and anti-whiplash headrests. With either a 175- or 210-horsepower turbocharged engine and a price that should slightly undercut the A4 Cabriolet's, hopefully the roofless 9-3 can do its part to restore Saab's position as a unique—yet profitable—car company.

TUNE IN TO THE SUMMER'S BIGGEST OUTDOOR MUSIC EVENTS

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

From an eclectic festival slate that includes the return of alt-rock circus Lollapalooza and a remote Maine campout with Phish—both for the first time in several years—to nights with new and old heavyweights like Norah Jones, Bruce Springsteen, Björk and Neil Young & Crazy Horse, 2003 should be a summer to remember for music.

The first half of the season boasts some can't-miss double bills at the FleetBoston Pavilion and the Tweeter Center. First up is the pairing of the soul powerhouses Van Morrison and Solomon Burke at the Pavilion. Morrison is a mercurial but often transcendent performer, and he should be on his best behavior with gospel-bred idol Burke opening with his Soul Alive Orchestra June 14-15. Superior sounds will continue at the Pavilion when alt-country mavericks Wilco and New York veterans Sonic Youth find their common ground with artful mixes of noise and melody June 23. Grammy-winning darling Norah Jones contrasts her quietly hypnotic jazz-pop vocals with the Appalachian stylings of Gillian Welch at the harborside tent June 28. And Elvis Costello fans can pump it up when the new wave–era Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductee returns to the Pavilion with his Imposters July 12.

Nostalgic jams invade the Tweeter when the Dead (formerly the Other Ones) rise again with all the main players from the Grateful fold except for the late Jerry Garcia, on a June 22 bill with ex-Traffic leader Steve Winwood. Even better is the July 13 pairing of the Allman Brothers Band (with Warren Haynes in Dickey Betts' old chair) and Norwell-bred blueswoman Susan Tedeschi. And expect Tedeschi to sit in with the Allmans; the band's other guitarist, Derek Trucks, is her husband.

The season's most essential double bill remains the July 1 Tweeter combination of Neil Young & Crazy Horse with Lucinda Williams. Young hasn't let Crazy Horse out of the stall for several years, and it's his best vehicle to unleash enough of an electric squall to fuel a thousand garage bands while also allowing him space to take an acoustic soliloquy. And ever-winning country renegade Williams provides the perfect complement.

Another sure Tweeter pick is a band that has collaborated with Young, the ever-resilient rockers Pearl Jam, who play July 2, 3 and 11. And there's no arguing with the explosive two-for-one punch of Aerosmith and Kiss at the Tweeter shed Aug. 25 and 27. Both bands rocked this region silly in the '70s and survived rock 'n' roll excesses to greet a new generation. If this is still Kiss' "Farewell Tour," Gene Simmons must have a bet with ex-flame Cher on who can stretch their swan song out the longest (he's in the lead by a tongue).

Meanwhile, highlights at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset include the classy bluesman Robert Cray and John Hiatt Aug. 3 and bluegrass darling Alison Krauss & Union Station Aug. 17.

The Charles River Esplanade should also feel good vibrations when Brian Wilson plays his Beach Boys hits at the MDC Hatch Shell June 14.

In terms of blockbuster package tours, the Tweeter Center leads the way with Rock the Mic, Lollapalooza and Ozzfest, which looks ready for retirement after this spin with Korn and Marilyn Manson joining wack-daddy Ozzy Osbourne (at the shed Aug. 14-15). Rock the Mic is a June 27 hip-hop summit headed by ever-smooth wordsmith Jay-Z and 50 Cent, an Eminem protégé who sports a bulletproof vest (he boasts that he's been shot nine times) and delivers blunt, streetwise rhymes on his chart-topping debut album Get Rich or Die Tryin'. The tour also includes two hip-hop eccentrics, Missy Elliott (whose Under Construction was one of 2002's best CDs) and Busta Rhymes.

Speaking of eccentrics, Jane's Addiction frontman Perry Farrell co-founded Lollapalooza in 1991, changing the face of mainstream rock by introducing alt-rockers like Jane's, Nine Inch Nails, Pearl Jam, and the Red Hot Chili Peppers to large audiences before calling it a day in 1997. Lollapalooza is back, hitting the Tweeter July 25, and Jane's Addiction has reunited to lead the pack. But Farrell and company won't be the only Lollapalooza vets aboard. Ex-Soundgarden frontman Chris Cornell will bust his lungs in Audioslave with former Rage Against the Machine members Tom Morello, Tim Commerford and Brad Wilk. Audioslave may be a step down from the substance of those guys' old bands, but it introduces kids to the spirit of the classic '70s rock quartet (think Led Zeppelin or Bad Company) with modern icing from guitar alchemist Morello. And Lollapalooza is neatly rounded out with smart rockers Queens of the Stone Age, the pop-slanted Incubus, the heady hip-hop crew Jurassic 5 and bratty all-female foursome the Donnas.

August kicks off with Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band at Foxboro's Gillette Stadium Aug. 1 and 2. Springsteen's arena dates in Boston and Providence were the past year's premiere shows, with the Boss at his evangelical peak and the E Street gang honed into a prime rock orchestra on such oldies as Candy's Room" and "Night" as well as new jewels om The Rising. The Providence show also indicated ıe Springsteen machine was tuning up for the sta- iums with more sweeping gestures to fans and a ong list that leaned back to crowd favorites from is Born in the U.S.A. heyday.

Just as big, in another dimension, is avant-pop rincess Björk, at Suffolk Downs Aug. 31. A truly riginal vocal gymnast, she'll be backed by electronic uo Matmos, harpist Zeena Parkins and the Icelandic tring Octet, plus new video projections.

Other Tweeter shows for your radar include art-rocker eter Gabriel (adjusting his in-the-round arena extrava- anza) June 18 and now-Grammy-decorated class act Steely an Aug. 16. The Tweeter shed will eventually round out its season ı top form with the Dave Matthews Band Sept. 8-9 and R.E.M. Oct. 5.

Then there's the festival season, which includes the Northeast inva- on of mega-multiband fests, just a ferry ride across Long Island Sound ı Calverton, N.Y. First up, on June 7-8, is the alt-rock Field Day, oasting Radiohead's only summer U.S. date, plus the Beastie Boys, eck, Sigur Rós and many others. Then Bonnaroo NE, an offshoot of ıe Tennessee jam-band blowout, rolls in Aug. 8-10 with the Dead, ob Dylan, Tom Petty, String Cheese Incident, Yo La Tengo, Disco iscuits and so on.

Jazz dominates the festival scene, however, beginning with the Boston lobe Jazz & Blues Festival. In addition to Pavilion shows with bluesmen uddy Guy and Los Lobos June 16, soul queen Aretha Franklin June 17 and ım brothers Medeski Martin & Wood and the John Scofield Band June 18, ıere are free after-work gems in Copley Square with saxman Joe Lovano June 7, pedal-steel wizard Robert Randolph June 18, trumpeter Roy Hargrove June 9 and vocal chanteuse Jane Monheit June 20, before the Herbie Hancock Quartet heads an MDC Hatch Shell bill June 22.

The JVC Newport Jazz Festival at Rhode Island's Fort Adams State Park Aug. -10 also looks promising, with singers India Arie and her dusky-voiced idol Cassandra Wilson, piano icon Dave Brubeck and hip piano trio the Bad Plus. The Apple & Eve Newport Folk Festival follows at the same waterfront park Aug 15-17 with the song-swapping quartet of Lyle Lovett, John Hiatt, Joe Ely nd Guy Clark, plus the ever-spunky Ani Difranco, pop songstress Aimee Mann nd Afro-pop firebrand Angelique Kidjo.

The weekend of Aug. 15-17 also brings the intimate jam-band gathering of Berk- est in Great Barrington's Butternut Ski Basin, featuring Medeski Martin & Wood, he New Deal, hip-hop inclusionists the Roots and gospel legends the Blind Boys of Alabama. But for a way-out-of-the-way experience, you can't beat "It," the return of Phish to the former Loring Air Force Base in Limestone, Maine, where the Vermont am-masters have been known to indulge in such concepts as mock villages, interac- ive art, fireworks and six sets of music. "It" will happen Aug. 2-3.

Roots music enthusiasts should gravitate to the free Lowell Folk Festival, which eatures an eclectic menu of largely undiscovered national artists around the city uly 25-27. And the Rhythm & Roots Festival returns to Ninigret Park in Charlestown, R.I., Aug. 29-31 with Cajun host Steve Riley, zydeco up- tarts Chris Ardoin and Geno Delafose, the rocking Little Feat and Sonny Landreth, and Irish specialists Solas.

Also on Labor Day weekend, the Tanglewood Jazz Festival will showcase vocalists Natalie Cole and Shirley Horn, trumpeter Wynton Marsalis, and pianists Donal Fox, Michel Camilo, Marian McPartland and Hiromi, the ast a Berklee-bred fusion phenomenon. McPartland, 84, will be taping her adio show Piano Jazz with special guest Norah Jones in an area encore ap- pearance. (For more on Tanglewood's schedule, see related story at right.) All in all, the summer's outdoor music selections offer something for every- one. Mark your datebooks now, so you'll be sure to catch all your favorites. iB

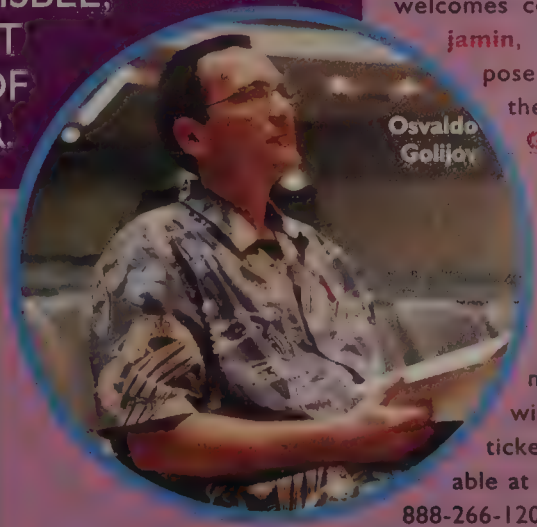
SIT ON TANGLEWOOD'S LAWN FOR $15, AND LET THE MUSIC AND ATMOSPHERE MINGLE WITH SOME FRISBEE, CHESS OR THAT HUGE STACK OF SUNDAY PAPER.



Osvaldo Golijov

MAESTROS AND MERLOT

For city dwellers, a day trip to Tanglewood is all you need for a breath of fresh air in summer

BY KEITH POWERS

Where can you can take your shoes off, sit in the plush green grass with a glass of wine and listen to one of the world's greatest orchestras? Tanglewood, of course. Here's the deal. On Saturday you stock up with guilty picnic pleasures at Savenor's, Marché, Golden Goose or Formaggio's. Perhaps you take a swing through Rosie's Bakery for some sweets. Sunday morning, fire up the car and head west for the idyllic Berkshires, two hours from downtown Boston. There's a show at 2:30 pm, so you don't even have to get up early.

While you're there, you can relax on the lawn for a mere $15 and let the music and atmosphere mingle with some Frisbee, chess or that huge stack of Sunday paper. Concerts last a couple of hours, so you'll be back in plenty of time to go out for drinks, putting the nightcap on a perfect summer Sunday.

Tanglewood, of course, is the off-season home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But Tanglewood also presents dozens of jazz, dance and pop concerts each summer: This year James Taylor kicks off the proceedings June 24. Wynton Marsalis (June 27), the Mark Morris Dance Group (June 29 and 30) and Jethro Tull (Aug. 12) make the trip to the Berkshires as well. Public radio heads will enjoy Garrison Keillor's annual visit June 28. The first annual Wine and Food Classic debuts Aug. 23, a prelude to Itzhak Perlman's appearance with Sir Neville Marriner and the BSO that evening.

But despite all the popular stuff, classical music still rules in Lenox. Tanglewood is a teaching institution, the destination of choice for nearly every conservatory student in America. Orchestra members give lessons and master classes, supported by dozens of special guest artists. Part of the magic of Tanglewood derives from the sound of rehearsal rooms coming to life with students learning new pieces and exploring musical partnerships.

New works are commissioned every summer, and this year two long-awaited operas will debut: Osvaldo Golijov's Ainadamar and Robert Zuidam's Rage d'amours will be performed Aug. 10 and 11. Golijov, who has roots in South America and Israel, writes music that appeals even to those who "don't do classical." His La Pasion segun san Marcos, commissioned and premiered in Nov. 2001, is best described as a symphony orchestra surrounding a kick-ass salsa band with dancers. The Pasion was splendidly received and has seen a number of repeat performances. Ainadamar, Golijov's first opera, is based on the final days of the Spanish poet Federico Garcia Lorca, and stars lustrous soprano Dawn Upshaw.

Tanglewood's official classical opener, on July 5, features the radiant mezzo Denyce Graves singing Prokofiev's Alexander Nevsky cantata under the directorship of maestro Kurt Masur. Familiar faces include Peter Serkin, performing with mezzo soprano Lorraine Hunt Lieberson July 10, Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos conducting Verdi's Requiem Aug.1, Yo-Yo Ma and Emanuel Ax Aug. 19, and the traditional season closer, a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Aug. 24 under the baton of James Conlon.

The Festival of Contemporary Music (July 17-21) usually includes some of the most spirited playing of the summer, as students and pros tackle new works. FCM conductor Robert Spano welcomes conductor George Benjamin, young American composer Jennifer Higdon, and the legendary composer Gyorgy Ligeti, celebrating his 80th birthday, to the festival for residencies this year.

Those are just a few highlights—you can hear music morning, noon and night at Tanglewood if you wish. Program details and ticket information are available at www.bso.org or by calling 888-266-1200.

BIKING IN BOSTON MAY BE DANGEROUS, BUT IT'S A WAY TO SAVOR THE NITTY-GRITTY OF EVERYDAY LIFE

BY SUSAN ABBATTISTA

When I was a kid, I spent whole summer days riding my blue three-speed bike around our suburban neighborhood. When I wasn't riding, I liked to play bike doctor. I'd flip my heavy Schwinn upside down, spin the pedals and watch the chain glide over the sprockets' spiny teeth. My mother had long given up on the idea of having a daughter who'd be content to spend her summers doing something clean and civilized. Every evening I came home covered with grime and grease. "Look at you!" she'd say. "Are you sure you're not a boy?" I was solemn but never apologetic. Riding bikes was serious, messy business.

It still is.

Today I ride a blue 24-speed Gary Fisher. On the back I've rigged up a cool wire basket. Once the warm weather arrives, I ride it every chance I get—to the supermarket, the bank, my yoga class, my friends' houses and the office.

I love my bike as much as young girls love ponies. But, it's true, you have to be a little crazy to ride in Boston. Pedestrians, cars, buses, construction sites and road hazards are everywhere. One false move, one tiny lapse of concentration, one twist of fate involving the confluence of countless factors beyond your control, and you could end up sprawled across the pavement—badly scraped, seriously injured…or, indeed, dead.

Until a few years ago, I rode only on designated paths and trails. Riding next to cars invoked the same feeling I'd experience when getting knocked down by large waves at the beach: intense fear of death. But even though I'd had many happy adventures on my favorite public bikeways, I remained perplexed by friends who rode in the city every day. Although they cycled for different reasons—protecting the earth, getting more exercise, blah-blah—they all enjoyed it enough to stick with it through thick and thin. Fear be damned, I was determined to find out what that was all about.

Days before my first morning bike commute, I envisioned the route from my house in Somerville to the Improper's Boston office: Ride down Beacon Street, through Inman Square, down to Kendall Square. Cross the Longfellow Bridge, turn onto Charles Street and then take Arlington Street to Columbus Avenue to Berkeley Street. Simple. Right.

The night before, I visited my friend Leslie, a year-round cyclist. "I'm riding my bike to work tomorrow," I said gravely. "Am I going to die?"

"Um," she said, munching on a carrot. "Probably not."

Leslie enumerated her rules of the road: Stay alert; don't weave; make sure you can see and be seen; wear lots of reflective gear (day or night); make eye contact with drivers, pedestrians and fellow cyclists; follow the rules of traffic; and don't assume others will follow the rules of traffic. "Most of all," she said, "remember to look for heads"—the silhouettes of people sitting in parked cars. "Biking in Boston is a learning experience," she told me. "After a while, you'll develop a sixth sense of knowing what people will do before they do it."

The next morning I strapped on my helmet, hopped on my bike and took off. Coasting down a long hill on Beacon Street in Somerville, I thought, Whoo, I am flying! Birds were chirping. Hello birdies! Cars whipped past on my left. In just 10 minutes, I was coasting through Kendall Square. Outside Au Bon Pain, people sat in the sun drinking coffee. A few cars sat double-parked outside. In one, I spotted a head and congratulated myself for being so savvy. I caught the driver's eyes looking at me in her side-view mirror. Yes, I see you too. Then, there was an unmistakable double click. That's a door latch. Bam! That's my tire slamming into the inside of a car door.

I flew sideways. I landed in the middle of the road. I heard the sound of my helmet hitting the pavement. I gave myself one full second to lie there. Then I thought Get up, you idiot and instantly popped up, dragging my bike with me. On the sidewalk, the driver who had just "doored me" watched as I took inventory of my bike and body. Deep scrapes, instant bruises. She shook her head. "I really didn't see you," she said.

"But you were looking right at me," I said. Hands shaking, I locked my bike up next to the Au Bon Pain and rode the train the rest of the way to work.

OK, so it took me a few days to get back on my bike. I kept hearing the click-click of the car door and knew that if it weren't for that lucky pause in traffic, I might have been squashed. Was I cut out for this type of danger? Would I let fear paralyze me?

After a few days, I tried the same route again. I skipped a day and then did it again. Each time, as I rode along, I drafted my own mental notes of how to ride: Keep a door's width of clearance beside parked cars; never assume drivers see you, even when they're looking directly at you. No matter what you do, though, things can get scary.

I still don't know what keeps other cyclists on the road, but I can say now what it is for me. During the winter months, when I take the train everywhere, I find myself traveling through life in a trance, surrounded by commuting zombies. In the hyper-alert state of riding a bike—sailing through the flickering landscape of air, sights, smells and sounds—there is never room for boredom or complacency. I am fully vulnerable, yes, but also fully exposed to the exquisite details of ordinary life.

I ride down Charles Street. Scrappy trees cast webs of shade upon car hoods; sprigs of grass poke up from unlikely homes in cement cracks; somewhere someone is making pizza. An old woman in a pale pink sweater takes small steps on the sidewalk. I see the soft gray curls at the nape of her neck, the way her hand shakes as she drops an envelope into the mailbox. She pulls the handle once more to make sure the letter has dropped. As I pass her, I smile. She looks at me pedaling by on my bike and her face registers something, maybe a memory. She smiles back. iB

ON THE TRAIL

Local bike paths let you enjoy a bit of country in the city

Biking is something of an extreme sport in Bosto Whether you're a bike messenger expertly navigatin through traffic or a regular Jane or Joe trying to g around town in a cost-efficient manner, biking through the cit has its fair share of headaches. Here are a handful of trails th offer a peaceful and relatively safe respite from the street Grab your wheels and go.

Arnold Arboretum

Who knew there were 265 acres of woodland in Bosto This 125-year-old Jamaica Plain urban park was designed b Central Park landscaper Frederick Law Olmsted and is pa of the Emerald Necklace park system. Paths are most closed to motorized vehicles and connect to other Bosto bikeways, such as the Stonybrook Reservation. Bikers, bird watchers, in-line skaters and hikers can view the Larz Ande son Bonsai Collection, the Lilac Collection, the Eleano Cabot Bradley Collection of Rosaceous Plants and the Ch nese Path or hike to the summit of Peters Hill (no bikes c the last 200 feet) for a panoramic view of Boston. The park open daily from dawn to dusk. www.massbike.org/bikeways.

Blue Hills Skyline Trail

Close enough to Boston to bike but far enough to feel lik you're away from the city, Blue Hills Reservation include 7,000 acres of woodlands, marsh and rocky hills, as well Houghton Pond and Great Blue Hill. Only 20 percent of th trails are open to bikers, but that still leaves about 25 miles explore. Experienced mountain bikers can enjoy the cha lenges of rolling rocky paths, while beginners will find plen of smoother trails. www.state.ma.us/mdc/blue.htm.

Minuteman Commuter Bikeway

The Minuteman Commuter Bikeway is a converted railro path that spans a 10-mile route from Cambridge's Alewi MBTA station through Arlington and Lexington to Bedfor Bikers, in-line skaters, pedestrians and, in the winter, cros country skiers can enjoy scenery including historic sites of th Revolutionary War, Minuteman National Historic Park, S Pond and the Great Meadow Wildlife Refuge. Motorized vel cles are prohibited, and the 12-foot-wide asphalt path leav plenty of room for all to share. Bikeway hours are 5 am-9 p year-round, and restrooms and refreshment outposts are l cated along the trail. www.minutemanbikeway.org.

Paul Dudley White Charles River Bikepaths

This 18-mile riverside loop traces both banks of the Charl River from the Museum of Science to Watertown, and scene includes the regal structures of Harvard, MIT and Boston U versity. Bikers should have their reflexes at the ready, though the constant battle between joggers, walkers and in-li skaters is especially bad on the weekends, and at some poin the path narrows to a mere four feet, with six-inch drop-offs the edges. www.state.ma.us/mdc/charlesr.htm.

Pierre Lallement Southwest Corridor Bikepath

This 4.8-mile bike path was named for the 19th-century Fren expatriate who went unrecognized in his lifetime for the inve tion of the pedal bicycle. The trail runs along the MBTA Oran Line route from the South End through Roxbury towa Franklin Park and cuts through the Southwest Corridor Line Park. Basketball, tennis courts and spray pools, as well as t house where Lallement spent his final days, are along the w And it sure beats riding a cramped, stuffy T from Back Bay Forest Hills. www.massbike.org/bikeways.

beach RETREATS

WHERE TO GO FOR THE ULTIMATE BEACH EXPERIENCE

You wake up on a hot summer morning; there's not a cloud in the sky. What's the first thing that comes to mind? Sun, sand, cool water. But where should you go? The Cape is beautiful, but battling the traffic for a day trip probably isn't worth the aggravation. Luckily there are plenty of beaches within a short drive, and each has its own special character, so there's one to suit any mood. Here's a quick review of just a few of the options you can choose for the perfect day at the beach.

NORTH SHORE

Chock-full O' Charm

ROCKPORT: The two public hot spots, referred to as the front and back beaches, provide lovely coastline views, refreshing sea-spray breezes and surrounding woodlands. This area once inspired the art of Winslow Homer, and the sailboats and schooners that traverse nearby Rockport Harbor are a quaint reminder of the seafaring culture that still thrives today. Just past Gloucester on Route 127A. Distance from Boston: 35 miles. Admission: free. Parking: Rates vary. www.rockportusa.com. 978-546-6575.

Pretty as a Picture

CRANE BEACH: Rolling dunes, whispering reeds and nearly four miles of gorgeous beach greet you at this calm seashore spot. This pristine habitat for rare plants and a variety of wildlife is protected by conservation efforts. Crane's scenery may prompt you to follow the lead of local artists and photographers who have been drawn by the landscapes, estuaries and tidepools. Argilla Road, Ipswich. Distance from Boston: 25 miles. Admission: $2 (on foot or bike); $15 per car weekdays ($7.50 after 3 pm); $20 per car weekends ($10 after 3 pm). www.thetrustees.org. 978-356-8540.

Bird-watchers' Bounty

PLUM ISLAND BEACH: Although there are no palm trees, this remote spot is the closest thing to Key West in the Northeast, minus the celebrities and warm water. This 11-mile long, cottage-lined beach community attracts fishermen, wildlife enthusiasts, sun-seekers and locals by the hundreds. And though there are no parrots, there are birds aplenty at the Parker River National Wildlife Refuge. Bring your binoculars and spot beautiful shorebirds. Plum Island Turnpike, Newburyport. Distance from Boston: 35 miles. Admission (beach): No fee (parking rates vary). Admission (refuge): $5 per car, $2 to walk or bike. www.newburyportchamber.org/plum_island.htm. 978-462-6680.

Wonderful Wading

WINGAERSHEEK BEACH: This long, wide sandy beach, on a sheltered inlet, is perfect for long walks in shallow water. Even though it's not deep, the water is still quite cold—great for quick dips to cool you down on the hottest days. Enjoy the picturesque backdrop of the serene Ipswich Bay, the Annisquam River or the lighthouse. Atlantic Street (off Route 128) on Ipswich Bay, Gloucester. Distance from Boston: 30 miles. Admission: $15 per car, weekdays; $20 per car, weekends. 978-281-9790.

Treat for the Feet

SINGING BEACH: Soothe your feet in the fine sand of this horseshoe-shaped, half-mile-long beach. The powdery sand, which squeaks when you walk on it, is also ideal for meandering down the beach to look at the mansions towering over the dunes. Masconomo Street (off Route 127), Manchester-by-the-Sea. Distance from Boston: 35 miles. Admission: $2 walk-on fee on weekends; $20 per car Mon.-Thu. (Parking for Manchester residents only on other days.) www.manchester.ma.us. 978-526-2000.

American Bandstand

REVERE BEACH: In its heyday, America's oldest public beach attracted Brahmin city dwellers with its big-band entertainment, majestic ballrooms and amusement rides. Today, the crowd is much more diverse and people come to appreciate the protected bay and the live entertainment at the bandstand. Revere Beach Blvd., Revere. By public transportation: Take the Blue Line to the Revere or Wonderland stop. Distance from Boston: 5 miles. Admission: Free. Parking: On-street, metered. www.revere beach.com. 781-289-8009.

BOSTON

Location, Location, Location

CONSTITUTION BEACH: One of Boston's most accessible shore spots (take the Blue Line to Orient Heights), Constitution Beach's tennis and handball courts, playground, foot showers, concession stand and new bathhouse make it feel more like an activity-packed racquet club than just a public beach. Orient Heights, East Boston. www.state.ma.us/mdc. Admission: Free. 617-727-5114.

SOUTH SHORE

That Coney Island Feeling

NANTASKET BEACH: Little has changed since the honky-tonk days of this old resort town. The arcade, T-shirt shops, miniature golf and the antique wooden Paragon Carousel give this three-mile beach an old-time Coney Island feel. Nantasket Avenue, Hull. Distance from Boston: 36 miles. Admission: free. Parking: $2. www.state.ma.us/mdc. 617-727-8865.

Almost the Cape

DUXBURY TOWN BEACH: The gorgeous four-mile pebbly shore may satisfy your longing for the Cape when you can't seem to get there. Like the Cape, there's a bay side and ocean side, and the bay side is generally much warmer. There's no better way to explore the coastline than in a four-wheel-drive vehicle—unless you prefer walking along the scenic, 2,200-foot bridge across the bay or out to a lighthouse. Weekends bring heavy traffic though, so watch out. Gurnet Road, Duxbury. Distance from Boston: 38 miles. Admission: free. Parking: $8 (public parking on the Marshfield side of the beach). www.duxburyharbormaster.org. 781-837-3112.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Action Packed

HAMPTON BEACH: You'd have to clip coupons to get better deals than this—free nightly entertainment on the outdoor stage, fireworks every Wednesday night, sand sculpture contests and monthly festivals. In the morning you can wander up the road to check out the surfers at North Hampton Beach. Route 1, Hampton Beach, N.H. Distance from Boston: 45 miles. Admission: free. Parking: Rates vary. www.hamptonbeach.org. 800-438-2826.

Castles Along the Sand

NORTH HAMPTON AND RYE: If a picnic lunch on a relatively quiet beach is your idea of a perfect day, North Hampton and Rye are two great beaches for you. With mansions lining one side and the ocean on the other, both beaches provide expansive views of the coast and the Isles of Shoals as well as people-watching opportunities. Route 1, North Hampton and Rye, N.H. Distance from Boston: 45 miles. Admission: free. Parking: $1.25 per hour (metered). 603-436-1552. IB

THE FORECAST FOR SUMMER 2003

INTERVIEWS BY JESSICA IREDALE

Left to right: gingerbread houses in Oak Bluffs; a boardwalk on Cape Cod; 902 Main Street in Yarmouth; the Summer House in Siasconset; two views of the Harbor View on the Vineyard

Even if you don't have a regular summer place on Cape Cod, Martha's Vineyard, or Nantucket, there's a good chance you'll join the leagues of vacationers heading to one of these spots at some point this summer. To help you plan ahead and to find out what's new this season, we talked to tourism experts in all three areas. Here, they offer tips on everything from new restaurants, hotels, and shops to perennial favorites that keep 'em coming back year after year to best-kept secrets that you may want to check out on your next visit.

CAPE COD

ELAINE PERRY: Cape Cod Chamber of Commerce, www.capecodchamber.org (888-332-2732)

Improper Bostonian: What's new on the restaurant scene?

Elaine Perry: 902 Main Street in South Yarmouth. And the British Beer Company, which opened last year in Hyannis and the year before in Falmouth.

IB: Any new hotels, spa services or beauty salons?

EP: We do have a new spa at the Cape Codder Resort & Spa, on Route 132 in Hyannis. [The resort] has been completely renovated and has a new wave pool.

IB: Any new developments or special offers in transportation?

EP: We have the brand new Hyannis Transportation Center on Main Street in Hyannis. It opened last year, but this is the first season in full operation. All the buses that go to Boston, Logan, New York [and] Providence are going to originate there. Also new this year is the Grey Lady II, a fast ferry catamaran to Nantucket operated by Hy-Line.

IB: What activities do you recommend for singles?

EP: The Cape Cod Melody Tent—it's run by the same people who run the South Shore Circus. We have Engelbert Humperdinck, Huey Lewis and Tony Bennett coming. Golf is always popular with singles. We have 34 public courses. Art galleries, singles usually like them. And the beach, obviously.

IB: Which events draw the largest attendance?

EP: The Barnstable County Fair, which is July 18-26, and Pops by the Sea with the Boston Pops. That's August 3rd on the Hyannis Village Green.

IB: What are the trendiest night spots?

EP: The Roo Bar and the Naked Oyster in Hyannis, The Beachcomber in Wellfleet and Commercial Street in Provincetown.

IB: What are some of the best-kept secrets of the cape—attractions or events that don't draw the masses?

EP: One is the Cape Cod Stampede, September 5-7. It's a real rodeo at the Barnstable County Fairgrounds.

IB: Are there any newish festivals or events to watch for?

EP: The Provincetown Film Festival is in its fifth year, but it's getting more and more prestigious. I would check our events calendar Web site. Everything is on there.

NANTUCKET

LISA REEFE JOHNSON: Nantucket Island Chamber of Commerce, www.nantucketchamber.org (508-228-1700)

IB: What are the highlights of the upcoming season?

Lisa Reefe Johnson: There's the Nantucket Film Festival June 19-22, which is dedicated to screenwriters.

IB: What events or activities do you recommend for singles?

LRJ: We've got great bars, great beaches, adventure clubs. There are opportunities to go hiking and biking. There's a good nightlife here in the spring and summer months. The Boarding House is pretty popular, and 21 Federal has a good singles scene.

IB: What are some of the best-kept secrets of the island?

LRJ: If you have access out to Siasconset, explore the Summer House. It has a poolside bar overlooking the ocean. People who come here don't necessarily think to go out of town. Chanticleer is eight miles from town and it's quintessential Nantucket. Another secret is Madaket Beach and the Westender. It's a restaurant/bar and you can go for sunsets.

KATE HAMILTON PARDEE: Nantucket Visitor Services, www.town.nantucket.ma.us (508-228-0925)

IB: Are there any new restaurants on the island?

Kate Hamilton Pardee: Spanking new is Eat Fire Spring (named for a secret area in Nantucket). It will be located on Old South Wharf.

IB: When are the busiest weeks?

KHP: Always the Fourth of July. We have pie-eating contests, and if the weather cooperates, we have a [fireworks] display at Jetties Beach. If I wanted to come here in July and August, I would definitely be making phone calls now.

IB: Are there any newish festivals or events to watch for?

KHP: The Atheneum Fundraiser is new on July 19. They did a restoration a few years ago and it's beautiful. It's the library fund-raiser, and they're having a Cirque du Soleil type of event.

IB: Any new developments in travel or lesser-known ways to get to the island?

KHP: There's Cape Air from Boston, Providence and New Bedford. Boston-Maine Airways flies from Manchester, N.H.

IB: Which events draw the largest attendance?

KHP: Fourth of July, definitely, also the Pops Concert, on August 9. That's a big event. It's just amazing. And August 16th is the Nantucket Boys and Girls Club Concert.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD

ROBIN RUSHNELL: Martha's Vineyard Chamber o Commerce, www.mvy.com (508-693-0085)

IB: When are the busiest weeks?

Robin Rushnell: We get most of our summer population between July 4 and Labor Day. Our population goes from 19,000 to over 100,000 during the summer months.

IB: How far in advance should visitors book?

RR: It's a good idea to be safe—anywhere from one to three months in advance. For those peak times, I would book now. More so really for the boat than for the accommodations.

IB: What will the highlights of the season be?

RR: The Annual Vineyard Artisans Fair takes place every weekend from June to September. Almost 100 artists in every type of craft exhibit their work at the Grange Hall in West Tisbury.

IB: What's new on the restaurant scene?

RR: The Harbor View has a new chef from Colorado—he just started within the past couple months. The chef at the Ice House in West Tisbury is new too.

IB: Hotels—new ones opening or renovations?

RR: The Tisbury Inn in Vineyard Haven, burned down last year and the Mansion House is going up in its place. It'll have 32 suites, a 75-foot pool, state-of-the-art health club and spa. They're taking reservations for July.

IB: What are the more popular spots for nightlife?

RR: Circuit Avenue [in Oak Bluffs] and the Hot Tin Roof in Edgartown would be kind of the hot spots.

IB: Are there any festivals or concerts to watch for?

RR: There are a lot of impromptu concerts in the park with Carly and James and their friends, and you never know where they're going to turn up. There's a film festival taking place in Oak Bluffs, put on by Cobblestone Entertainment, the weekend of July 4.

IB: Which events draw the largest attendance?

RR: The Ag Fair is August 21-24. That's huge. And Illumination Night, which takes place in August, usually the Wednesday before the fireworks. [Traditionally, the date is a secret until just a few days before the event.] There's a big artisans' craft fair over Labor Day weekend. And the Tisbury Street Fair, July 8, and Tivoli Day September 13.

IB: What are some of the best-kept secrets of the island?

RR: Felix Neck, our wildlife sanctuary. Menemsha is one of the 10 best places to watch a sunset in the country, and it's also where Jaws, the movie, was shot. People can drive to Menemsha, park their car and get take-out clams and lobster from either the Bite or the Homeport, and watch the sunset on the beach. I would also say the Aquinnah Cliff area, owned by the Wampanoag Indian tribe. IB

FEROCIOUS BEARS AND SINATRA LOOKALIKES

Total Entertainment has thousands of costumes, entertainers, and party props like Velcro walls and "bouncy boxing rings" for hire. Call 978-531-2444 or go to www.totalentertainment.org.

All sorts of parties, from kids' birthdays to grownup events, can be livened up by Total Entertainment. This company can make your bar mitzvah, sweet-sixteen, March Madness party or company bash into an ad hoc amusement park with inflatable slides, boxing rings where you can duke it out with oversized padded gloves or a dunk-the-clown booth, among other amusements. The non-dunking clown, Jim, wryly goofy in his giant, yellow-spotted suit, gets kids to do the limbo and the hokeypokey, orchestrates singalongs and shares the joy of the microphone with the laughing juveniles. The company has performers who dress as popular children's characters like Mickey Mouse and Buzz Lightyear, as well as celebrity lookalikes. How about inviting Elvis, Austin Powers or Marilyn Monroe to your bash? ("Michael Jackson" is available too, if you think the kids won't be frightened.) Need some fat guys? Total Entertainment's chubby sumo-wrestler suits will do the trick. The company also offers caricature artists. For animal-loving tykes, it can provide reindeer, ponies and Sicilian donkeys. And at the holidays, the Santas have real beards.

A LADO GOOD STUFF

Otro Lado, a Mexican store, has moved to 5 Brookline St., Cambridge. Call 617-354-1475.

Otro Lado has relocated to a new spot just across from the jazzily bright mural decorating the Middle East nightclub, and the two business' twin symbols of color merry up the whole block. Buzzing with green, yellow, orange and pink, Otro Lado is an "urban marketplace" of things mostly Mexican. You'll find quality silver jewelry from Taxco alongside simpler everyday things, like necklaces dancing with little red doodads. Colorful oilcloths bring sunshine to tabletops or shelves. (The company's slogan is, "A new oilcloth makes the whole family happy." And it's true!) Sweetly sturdy posters for schoolchildren depict upright-looking men in career attire; another one shows beautiful pale birds, another gives hygiene tips ("Drink not from puddles!"). Day of the Dead, a set of skeletal rockers, ambulance drivers and card players, comes in teeny wooden tableaux, joyously macabre. American items, like round Corona Beer trays, some Betty Boopiana and bags made from juice cartons, just look more festive Mexicanized. Put together a delicate, papery, twinkling chandelier of sorts, a string of chili lights, and some eats from the Viva la Vida cookbook and you could have the beginnings of one hot party.

O FATHER, WHERE ART THOU?

In the documentary All Men Are Sons, John Badalament follows five men through their variously troubled relationships with their fathers. Call 800-343-5540 to order a copy. The video will be shown on WGBH (Channel 2 and 44) on Father's Day, June 15.

"The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the sons' teeth are set on edge," says one presciently psychological passage in the Bible. To explore that often-troubled connection, the father-and-son relationship, filmmaker John Badalament followed five men in a group run by therapist Terry Real. They're sympathetic guys, attractive, articulate, ripe with feeling and pain, bent on repair and worried about repeating the perceived embedded mistakes that their fathers made. One, whose father scooted off to Mexico, gnaws with abandonment pains that demand connection and reparation in meetings with the father. Another wants his perfectionist, driven father to recognize his own alternative lifestyle—as a gay man pursuing nonprofit idealism. He realizes, almost ruefully, that his father's values, not all bad, are alive in him. Two others have a father and stepfather lost to addictions. For them, interacting more responsibly and productively with children and other young people has become a fierce quest. The son of a preacher almost abandons his pregnant girlfriend, but a meditative retreat brings him back to the realm of fatherhood, just in time. Badalament's work beautifully mines a highly resonant theme.

THAI TREASURE

With its authentic Northern Thailand cooking and reasonable prices, Khao Sarn Cuisine stands out amid Coolidge Corner's abundance of Asian offerings

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Pla neung ma-now*: steamed whole striped bass in a spicy and tangy sauce made with lime, garlic and chili

The seductive cuisine at this exceptional restaurant captivates the senses. Vibrant, variegated colors catch the eye. Fresh, crisp textures delight the mouth. Pleasantly provocative flavors charm the taste buds. Bright, upbeat surroundings and gracious, friendly, efficient service make one feel like an honored guest, not just a customer. It takes a lot for a restaurant to compete at Coolidge Corner, where dozens of contenders for dining dollars—many of them offering Asian cuisine—radiate up and down Beacon and Harvard Streets in all directions. With the qualities recited above, Khao Sarn Cuisine is well armed to win its share of hungry patrons at this hot location.

The first thing I ordered, miang kum ($7.25), made clear that this is an eatery to be reckoned with. The dish—several spinach leaves topped with baked coconut, dried shrimp, roasted peanuts, red onions, fresh ginger and small slices of lime—captured the imagination with its flavors and stunning presentation. The sweetness of the coconut, briny savor of the shrimp, pungency of the ginger, tang of the onions, and mild tartness of the lime enhanced the familiar flavor of the peanuts. Mee grob ($5.75) rivaled the miang kum in its originality and delightful taste and texture contrasts. Crispy rice noodles and al dente shrimp provided a mouth-pleasing crunch alongside firm but tender bean sprouts and soft nuggets of fried tofu. Minced scallions and a tangy tamarind supplied a zesty counterpoint to the muted sweetness of the noodles.

Khao Sarn rolls ($5.75) were a Thai rendition of classic Chinese spring rolls, crisply fried and filled with a toothsome combination of spiced chicken and minced vegetables, enlivened with fresh ginger. Similar, but considerably more interesting in both appearance and content, were the crispy shrimp ($6.50), deep-fried golden brown and full-flavored. The succulence of the shrimp made the sweet chili sauce accompaniment superfluous. Finally, and far from ordinary, were the vegetable dumplings ($5.75), three large, moist cakes of seasoned rice stuffed with chives. Soft in texture, their haunting flavor teased an extra effort out of the taste buds, and their girth made a substantial dent in my appetite.

Khao Sarn uses exotic fruits to good effect in many of its dishes. For example, goong lychee ($14.25) combined tiger shrimps with juicy, velvety-textured lychees. The dish also featured strips of orange bell pepper, crunchy asparagus spears and fresh leaves of aromatic basil, whose strong minty flavor gave the dish a sharp, memorable edge but did not overwhelm the sensuously delectable lychees and the lively flavor of the shrimp. Mango fried rice ($8.95) matched diced mango with carrots, shrimp, egg, green peas, onion and cashews—an ensemble that will probably spoil my future enjoyment of ordinary fried rice. Finally among the fruit-accented preparations, the tamarind duck ($13.75) brought boneless roasted duck breast with crispy, pleasantly salty skin and moist, succulent flesh. It was served on a bed of steamed broccoli with mushrooms, baby corn and slices of orange pepper topped with a tangy tamarind sauce. (Made from the mildly citric fruit of the tamarind tree, the sauce is a staple of West Indian, African and South Asian cooking.)

Shrimp himmapran ($12.95) married hefty shrimps sautéed in a mildly hot sauce (Khao Sarn's menu awards this dish one chili icon out of a possible three) with roasted cashews, onions, mushrooms, red pepper, crispy snow peas and scallions. Each of these ingredients contributed its own unique aspects to this well-constructed dish.

Moving further along Khao Sarn's lengthy menu—almost a hundred choices are listed overall—we encountered a credible version of the most well-known Thai dish, pad Thai ($8.50), consisting of stir- fried rice noodles with chicken, shrimp, ground peanuts, eggs, bean sprouts and scallions. In the same family was the less common pad see-ew ($8.75), Thailand's counterpart to Chinese chow fun, composed of wide, velvety-textured rice noodles, al dente Chinese broccoli and generous strips o juicy beef.

When I ordered th pla neung ma-no ($15.95), a steame whole striped bass, th waitress warned tha the dish indeed did con sist of a whole fish, wit "head, eyes, tail...th whole thing," suggest ing that this presenta tion sometimes surprised squeamish pa trons. Once the dish arrived, however, th provocatively garlicked flesh bathed i tangy lime, assertive garlic and fiery chi proved irresistible. But despite her warn ing about the appearance of the whol fish, our waitress omitted to point out tha this offering could have merited thre chili icons on the menu. The bed of shred ded lettuce provided a cooling respit from the spicy fish. Only the difficulty o extracting the succulent flesh from th bones diminished enjoyment of this sub stantial creation.

There were no bones in the moo pa lo 10.95), a braised pork stew with hard-iled eggs and fried wedges of tofu, rved in a small casserole. The tender eat, with its robust, rich sauce, demon-rated another facet of this versatile cui-ne. Finally, larb kai ($10.25) brought nat was in essence a hash of ground icken tossed with shallots, mint leaves, erry tomato halves and cilantro, ac-mpanied by rings of Bermuda onion, eled cucumber slices and a carrot rved into a flower. In fact, most of Khao rn's offerings were garnished with slices orange, sculpted carrots and other visu-y attractive embellishments.

One could dine at Khao Sarn every night r a month without exhausting its cornu-pia of offerings. Encyclopedic menus en make me nervous, suggesting that the staurant's reach exceeds its grasp. Here, cause so many of the menu items stem m permutations of certain core ingredi-ts—shrimp, chicken, peppers, mush-oms, scallions, bean sprouts, broccoli, fu, coconut, peanuts and cashews—and a w well chosen spices and herbs, and be-cause so much of the preparation consists of last-minute, quick stir-frying, concerns about the long menu are not warranted. Remarkably, of the 15 dishes I sampled on two different visits, all met or exceeded the high standard that this kitchen sets for itself.

Khao Sarn's delightful cuisine is all the more enjoyable because of the light, airy environment in which it is served. Huge, partially frosted plate glass windows admit wonderful natural light. The high ceiling, blond wood tables and paneling, beige curtains, and pink-red draperies bask in that light.

From the long bar comes a selection of exotic drinks, including specialty martinis ($6.50) served in large martini glasses straight up. Most notable were a mango martini containing chunks of ripe mango soaked in vodka, and a lychee martini, in which lychees swimming in sake are finished with a splash of Tanqueray gin. While wines are available, the best bet from the bar is Thailand's Singha beer ($3.75). Aromatic and delicious, it's the perfect accompaniment to this eatery's splendid food. iB

Dishwasher cleans up...

Perdix redux...White House toast...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

When chef Didi Emmons hired Alex Mejio to wash dishes at her Veggie Planet in Harvard Square, he quickly earned enough to take on additional responsibilities as a prep cook. He worked long hours, earning enough to send money home regularly to his family in Colombia. A few weeks ago, Mejio also learned that it's a really bad idea to store a cash-filled knapsack in a public restroom...and that his employer can whip up a fund-raiser that's as appealing and successful as her bestselling Vegetarian Planet cookbook.

Alex Mejio displays his holey apron.

Here's the story: Because his waterproof apron was full of holes, Mejio wanted to store his money in a dry place. But despite his checking on the knapsack every 20 minutes or so, somebody stole the cash. Emmons immediately planned a Colombian benefit dinner for Mejio, for which the entire waitstaff and kitchen staff volunteered their time. The result: a sold-out event that generated more money than Mejio lost.

SECOND COURSE

If you're a night owl, you'll be happy to know that the clever Andy Husbands has introduced a late-night bar menu and game menu at Rouge in the South End. That's not "game" as in venison, but Pictionary, Scrabble, cribbage, etc., to occupy your mind while you occupy your mouth with deviled eggs or shrimp remoulade. Also, the new Back Bay Summer Shack is serving a late-night raw-bar menu Thursday through Sunday until 1 am.

Perdix update: Tim Partridge will reincarnate his popular eatery, formerly located in Jamaica Plain, in the South End space soon to be vacated by Truc. Partridge will still be cooking with sous chef Bill Truite, and he plans a basically American menu, with almost all main courses priced at $20 or less.

Exorcism and the city: It's official, Barbara Lynch, chef/owner of No. 9 Park, is no longer possessed by the spirit of Susan Lucci. After being nominated four or five times (but who's counting?) for the James Beard Foundation's Best Chef/Northeast award, Lynch finally received the coveted honor earlier this month in New York. Congrats!

A new kind of "farm team": Although Peter Davis, chef at Henrietta's Table, is a low-key kind of guy, he's eager to promote the local farmers and fisherfolk who provide the ingredients for his ever-changing menu. Many restaurants detail the provenance of their vegetables, herbs or seafood, but Davis is taking boosterism one step further. Soon diners will be presented with baseball-style cards that feature individual farmers, probably along with some stats. Biggest rutabaga! Most productive goat! Collect 'em all!

Finally, although Boston pastry chef Ursula Argyropoulos has been named executive pastry chef at Raphael Bar-Risto in Providence, she's still keeping a (very clean) hand in her local business Art of the Cake, producing exquisite, custom-made special-occasion cakes. And she gets around, too. While in Washington, D.C., recently, she snagged an invitation to breakfast at the White House—specifically, the elegant White House Officers' Mess in the West Wing. President Bush was out of town, but Barney, the presidential pooch, greeted Argyropoulos with "a great big smooch," she says. As for the food, she reports that her (American) cheese omelet was "done to perfection." And in case you're wondering, French toast is still on the menu.

Bottoms Out: Rock Bottom Brewery, apparently not finding the bottom line in Harvard Square to its liking, is closing its Cambridge location. iB

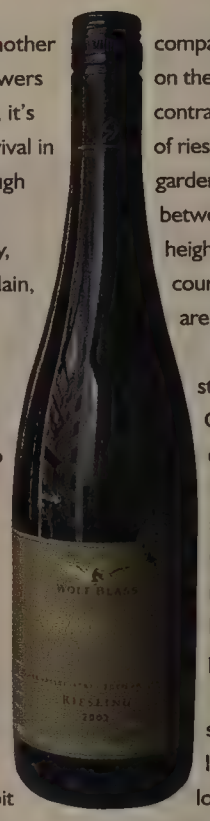
Riesling Revival

BY SANDY BLOCK MW



It would hardly be spring without another sermon from me on the healing powers of riesling. Except this time around, it's different. There's a definite riesling revival in motion. People no longer stare as though you're visiting from another dimension when you mention the grape. Suddenly, after years of obscurity verging on disdain, riesling is, dare we say it, hot.

It's part of a change in our popular acceptance of white wines with strong flavors. Blandness has reigned supreme for an interminable time, and there's no doubt that minimalist esthetics still dictate the general direction of the market. But along the fringes, among those who actually care about wine as opposed to just drinking it, flavor is suddenly in. Having conducted many tastings over the years in front of this small segment of the populace who are committed enough to plunk down some serious coinage to sniff, gurgle, spit and explore their palates, I can report that the mood has shifted. Even five years ago, maximum-impact white wines like riesling or sauvignon blanc elicited a vastly different reaction. No matter how sophisticated the group, when we got to the white wines with serious flavors, I knew what was coming: sour faces, rolling eyes, audible exclamations of "yicch" and "blecch." A roomful of adults would magically regress into preteens. But now, almost every time I get up to expound, the vast majority seems excited to taste these wines and eager to explore the possibilities they provide for dining ecstasy.

So what happened? Some credit goes to my colleagues on the front lines of the sommelier world for not giving up the faith. Even more deserving are the army of culinary experts who have persisted in elevating our appreciation of flavor to the point where we're ready to accept it in white wine. With all the sweet, albeit balanced, flavors showing up on menus in recent years, did we really think that wines with prominent fruit flavors could remain suppressed forever? Riesling is not only a great antidote to the hot flavor effects that have reached our palate from Asia and Latin America, its intense apple- and peach-like flavor also makes it a suitable partner for fruit-influenced sauces and relishes. What else is there to say about the versatility of a wine that in some form or another complements sushi, kimchee, vindaloo curry, jalapeño peppers, mustards, capers, toned down vinaigrettes, vegetables of all colors and textures, lobster, baked ham, roast duck and even—now the secret is out—grilled hot dogs?

If you haven't yet discovered its virtues, this is the time of year to get into the riesling game. It's generally delicious served very cold, and its comparatively low alcohol content feels good on the palate in warmer weather. In fact, in contrast to most forms of alcohol, an icy glass of riesling—its fragrance reminiscent of a spring garden, its flavors dancing on the border between sweet and sour—can actually heighten your energy level. (Although, of course, too many glasses, icy or otherwise, are bound to have just the opposite effect.)

So where do we look for the best steamy-season rieslings? Not, in general, California. While there are some lovely examples, California rieslings tend to be heavier and more honeyed in style and so are probably best suited for autumn. On the other hand, cooler East Coast regions, in particular upstate New York's Finger Lakes region, are producing some pretty fine examples of the grape.

Riesling central, however, is, and for some time will continue to be, Germany. If your palate is open, how can you not love the fine, elegant, aromatically pure and deliciously balanced spätlese originating in the Mosel Saar Ruwer? But buying German riesling remains incredibly complicated—there is so much esoteric language on the label that it's virtually impossible to distinguish the great stuff from the swill. If you want to explore this area,

> BLANDNESS HAS REIGNED SUPREME FOR AN INTERMINABLE TIME...BUT FLAVOR IS SUDDENLY IN.

you need guidance from a good wine merchant who knows his or her stuff. Choosing an Austrian riesling is a little easier, although not much more so. The wines tend to be fuller-bodied. My current favorite places for riesling adventure are, in ascending order of excitement, New Zealand (which doesn't produce very much), Alsace (which is the reigning classic in the drier style, but has been confusing in recent years because many of the wines are over the edge with sweetness), and in first place, Australia (which is reliably dry, clean, and excitingly citric). If you go to a restaurant that offers riesling by the glass, order it; you probably won't go wrong, because whoever put it on the list is most likely a devotee who's chosen carefully. IB

Music: You Don't Have to Have a Point

Fans of rock opera (think Tommy and Jesus Christ Superstar) adore the genre for its quirky way of combining the high-decibel intensity of rock 'n' roll with the dramatic narrative of opera, all presented in a highly theatrical performance. No one captures the unique flavor of rock opera better than local troupe Boston Rock Opera, which has been fusing song and theater for the past decade in productions like The Rocky Horror Show. To celebrate, it's throwing a party, chock full of performances. The highlight is BRO's interpretation of The Point!, Harry Nilsson's 1970s soundtrack for an animated children's fable about the round-headed boy Oblio and his dog, Arrow. There's also a performance of Skypaint, an eight-person show that incorporates sci-fi tinged animation. Middle East Downstairs, 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-931-2000). 8:30 pm. $10.

MON./JUNE 2 AND 9

Movies: Summer Songs

Jazz in June, an annual summer favorite at the Coolidge Corner Theatre, returns on Monday nights with performances by jazz musicians from the New England Conservatory and screenings of jazz-themed documentaries. This year's five programs focus on the music and lives of legendary performers Louis Armstrong, Billie Holiday, Charles Mingus, John Coltrane and Charlie Parker (right). The shows begin at 7:30 pm with musical performances, followed by the film. The jazz jubilee kicks off June 2 with the Gabe Johnson Trio and the film Satchmo: Louis Armstrong, and continues June 9 with one of the most energetic jazz bands around, Dead Cat Bounce, and the film Celebrating Bird: The Triumph of Charlie Parker. 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.coolidge.org. $10.

SUN./JUNE 1

CityScope: Food, Fun and Religious Fervor

The aroma of roasted garlic mingles with grilled sausage and onions, and the strains of an accordion lure curious passersby along the narrow streets to the Feast of Santa Maria Di Anzano, one of several Italian-American celebrations held throughout the summer in the North End. A total of 10 neighborhood societies exist to pay homage to saints Maria DiAnzano, Rocco, Jude and Joseph, among others, and every summer they open their doors and invite accidental tourists and devotees alike to listen to live music; munch on crusty rolls stuffed with spiced beef, prosciutto and cheese; sip homemade red wine; play carnival games or join a procession. The festivities begin June 1 and continue on various weekends through the end of August. www.northendboston.com.

Harpoon Brewstock Festival

There's nothing wrong with bundling up in hats and mittens and huddling with 500 of your nearest and dearest under a tent, drinking beer and listening to live music in the middle of winter. But it's a heck of a lot more fun when the weather's balmy and the folks at Harpoon Brewery open the tent doors and let the party spill out onto the enclosed area next to the brewery. That's where you'll find us—parked at a picnic table, raising our glasses to Mother Nature and feasting on barbecued chicken from Jake's Dixie Roadhouse. Throughout the day, local bands will take the stage, performing everything from rock to reggae. It's springtime—let's dance! Harpoon Brewery, 306 Northern Ave., Boston (888-427-7666). May 30, 5:30-11 pm; May 31, 2-11 pm. $10.

TUE./JUNE 10-THU./JUNE 12

Tastings: Touchdown!

Do the math with us. If eight ice cream companies scoop three or four flavors each—everything from cookies 'n' cream to pistachio to chocolate fudge chunk—and the Scooper Bowl runs from 11:30 am to 6 pm, the question is, Is there enough time for you to try every single flavor before you either A) explode or B) get so jazzed on sugar that you're not able to function? The answer is a definitive yes. How do we know? We did it last year. Yes, this annual event to benefit the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute draws ice cream-aholics like ourselves who binge on dozens of flavors for a mere $7 at City Hall Plaza. Just don't plan on heading back to the office afterward: work + ice cream ≠ productivity. City Hall Plaza, Boston (800-52-525-4669). www.jimmyfund.org. $7, $3 children.

The Oddest Couple

Mr. Miyagi meets Mr. Jefferson in a new take on Neil Simon's classic

The task of developing a fresh interpretation of Neil Simon's 1965 Broadway smash The Odd Couple led producers to ponder specifically what elements make for an "odd couple." Turns out, the answer was easy: Pat Morita of The Karate Kid fame, and Sherman Helmsley, best known as the patriarch of The Jeffersons. "You have a black man and a yellow man and, well, maybe these two really are an odd couple," says Morita of director Jay Dysart's new production of the play made famous by the 1968 big-screen pairing of Walter Matthau and Jack Lemmon as two divorcé roommates struggling to get along.

"The story features two opposites, two extremes," says Helmsley, who will take on the role of Oscar, the slovenly bachelor whose life is undone after his neurotic and recently divorced buddy, Felix, played by Morita, moves in with him. Deciding which veteran actor would play which foil character was easy. "By nature, I am Felix. I'm the nit-picky guy. I prop up pillows and empty ashtrays," explains Morita (though Helmsley has played the role of Felix before, in a 1970s production in Texas).

"We planted this seed three years ago," Morita says. "I said I would like to do The Odd Couple, and Sherman's named popped up. Fortunately, he was available." Both men are excited to work together, but Morita expresses a bit of apprehension about performing live on stage—his first time ever. "Night after night, it is kind of scary. To think that I am suddenly going to remake myself into a thespian. With movie or television work, if somebody goofs, you can redo it." Stoneham Theatre, Stoneham (781-279-2200). Wed. and Thu., 7:30 pm; Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 4 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30 pm. June 6-29. $30-$35. —Michelle Grabicki

Con Job

The Italian Job can't make a clean getaway

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The build-up is definitely better than the payoff in The Italian Job, a slick crime thriller that during its last 45 minutes plummets like a half-ton safe through a hole in a floor.

Making holes in floors for safes to drop through is the technique used by the thieves in this remake of the 1969 English caper film that starred Michael Caine. The remake's crew includes mastermind Charlie (Mark Wahlberg), wizened safecracker John (Donald Sutherland), Steve (Edward Norton), munitions expert Left Ear (Mos Def), getaway driver Handsome Rob (Jason Statham) and computer hacker Lyle (Seth Green). When we first meet them, they're in Venice, heisting a safe by blowing holes in two floors so that the safe plunges into the canal below. They blast with precision, crack open the safe while underwater, elude the carabinieri in a boat chase and make off with $35 million in gold bullion.

Mark Wahlberg plays the mastermind behind a heist that involves Stella, played by Charlize Theron.

So far, so good—until the crew meets to divide the spoils. That's when Norton's Steve peppers the old safecracker with bullets, steals the gold and leaves the rest for dead, underwater in their van in icy Alpine waters. But the others resurface, hook up with the dead man's daughter, Stella (Charlize Theron), and plot revenge on the double-crosser.

Charlie discovers that Steve is in Los Angeles, squirreled away in a mansion behind a high-tech security system and a bevy of armed guards. Now, the crew plots to rob the robber, using their assorted skills to figure out how to bypass Steve's security system, get the gold and get it out of the mansion. Stella, like her father, can crack safes, though so far she's used this skill only to be, as she describes it, a "lock and vault technician." Like the Venice section, the preparations for this second job zip along with semiclever fun, as capable second bananas Statham, Mos Def and especially Green provide comic relief. (The running gag with Green's character is that he was Shawn Fanning's roommate at Northeastern, and claims he, not Fanning, really invented Napster.)

But the comforting sense that The Italian Job is a capable movie quickly vanishes the night of the robbery. The crew picks this particular night because, for some unexplained reason, they know days before that Steve will be out. But when they arrive at the mansion, a party at Steve's neighbor's has spilled in front of Steve's gates, so the crew can't secretly blow open the gates. (Wait a minute...didn't we learn that Steve lives in a wealthy neighborhood where the houses are hundreds of yards apart?) The crew realizes it must move to plan B, and Stella, who previously snuck into Steve's house posing as a cable technician and got hit on by him, joins Steve at the restaurant where he's dining.

Director F. Gary Gray and writer Neal Purvis don't even bother to mention how that's supposed to help the crew break into the mansion. The restaurant scene is there solely to help the movie, not the crew. It's there so Steve can realize who Stella is, so the men of the crew can confront Steve, so Steve can decide to flee Los Angeles. This allows director Gray to pull off the film's biggest similarity with the 1969 original—an armored-car heist in which the crew uses stripped-down, souped-up Mini Coopers to cause traffic jams that let them control the armored car's route.

The Coopers are the real stars of The Italian Job, but if you've seen the movie's trailer, you've seen the chase scenes already. And it's not hard for the nifty Minis to overshadow the underdeveloped characters. Steve is such a vaguely defined character the crew doesn't even have to replace him. Having substantial Norton play him doesn't help much, either. Charlie and Stella are more developed, but not much (the script can't decide if Stella is a thrill-seeker or a control freak). The movie is all plot, and when the plot poops out, it has little else to offer. Finally, the neatly wrapped ending blunders to an out-of-the-blue epilogue that makes you wonder whether a romantic subplot ended up on the cutting-room floor. The Italian Job would be a great car commercial, but it's a clumsy movie. IB

I doubt that Jack Nicholson and Queen Latif have ever competed for the same role. But t Nicholson–Adam Sandler comedy is cut from t same limp, high-concept formula as Bringing Do the House. It's got the same sort of hapless he the same sort of annoying intruder to his life a the same pre-fab happy ending. This time, Sand is the guy who gets put on the right path by t unorthodox outsider. He's a guy who needs sertiveness training but who, due to several m ups, ends up sentenced to the anger manageme seminars Nicholson's character runs. About only sparks here are the outbursts by John T turro, who plays the most angry member of t Nicholson-run support group. You'll feel like h if you pay to see this. (At Boston Common, Fe way and suburbs.)

Bend It Like Beckham ★★½
The feisty young woman caught between t cultures—think Double Happiness, Mississi Masala and My Big Fat Greek Wedding—g trotted out yet again in director Gurin Chadha's latest, which can't compare to her Bh on the Beach but is still involving. Parmin Nagra gives a winning performance as Jess, t Indian-English teen with soccer skills and t Sikh parents who won't allow her to pursue suc nontraditional female endeavor. When Jess recruited to play for a local women's team, wi the possibility of discovery by an American team, the scene is set for lots of running arou behind her parents' back and comic mishaps— fact, an awful lot of repetitive running around a mishaps. It's all pretty predictable, but Nag Anupam Kher (as the heroine's father) and Ke Knightley (as her teammate and sometime riva as well as Chadha's sense of compassion, he dignity fight caricature to a standoff. (At Bost Common, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corne

Better Luck Tomorrow ★★★
Writer-director Justin Lin takes the Asian-Ame can movie beyond the immigrant experience in t free-wheeling story of high school honor stude who start dabbling in crime. The title is apparentl nod to John Woo's A Better Tomorrow, and this is the story of friends whose relationships get ripp apart by their life of crime. Quick, funny, viole and smart, the movie marinates its irreverent ta on high school life in the stew of hormones a power that drives its teen characters. We've n heard the last from Lin. (At Copley Place and Ha vard Square.)

Blue Car ★★
Newcomer Agnes Bruckner gives a stunning perf mance as a confused high school senior, but writ director Karen Moncrieff's movie is a standard-iss indie debut. It never rises above its indie cliches: t troubled teen, divorced parents, self-destructive su porting characters who threaten to pull down t heroine, the sexual tension of 18-year-old Meg's r lationship with her supportive English teacher (Dav Strathairn). Not bad, but not very special, eith (At Harvard Square.)

Bulletproof Monk ★½
Chow Yun-Fat deserves better than this cartooni action drama in which he plays a butt-kicking betan monk protecting a sacred scroll who finds h unlikely, and unconvincing, successor in the pic pocket played by Seann William Scott. The aud ence deserves better, too. (At Boston Commo Fenway and suburbs.)

City of Ghosts ★★
Matt Dillon has come up with an interesting subje for his directorial debut. He plays a con man wh after a scam, has fled the States to meet up with h partner and mentor (James Caan) in Cambodi Dillon's character gets involved in the mentor's ne scheme, but considering the inconvenience he ge through in Cambodia—getting beaten, robbed a thoroughly disheartened—it's hard to see why h does. The script, cowritten by Dillon and Barry Gi ford (Wild at Heart), never makes the Dillon-Ca bond feel strong enough to outweigh these obst cles. And the movie is longwinded as well, making that much harder to care. (At Copley Place a Kendall Square.)

Confidence ★★★
This tale of a team of con men comes off like hodgepodge of the crime stories of David Mami Jim Thompson and Elmore Leonard. But it has zippy pace, an amusing sense of gallows humor a a colorful cast. Edward Burns, Paul Giamatti a Rachel Weisz head up the crew of con men; An Garcia, Luis Guzman and Donal Logue play t equally twisted lawmen; and Dustin Hoffman is the scuzzy crime kingpin who forces the crew to pull a con of his choosing after they mistakenly rip off a briefcase of money from his accountant. Director James Foley has a Thompson adaptation (After Dark, My Sweet) and a Mamet adaptation (Glengarry Glen Ross) in his past, so he knows how to keep it lean and mean. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Identity ★★

The strong cast including John Cusack, Ray Liotta, Amanda Peet and John Hawkes helps, but the plot in this thriller by writer-director James Mangold becomes more and more arbitrary as it progresses. That means that the twists in this tale of a bunch of travelers stranded at a Nevada motel, who start dying one by one, keep having less and less impact, right down to the obligatory, empty twist ending. It's good to see the who-dies-next plot done with adults instead of teens for a change, but the suspense bleeds out of this movie like the air seeping from a slow leak in a balloon. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Man on the Train ★★★

Jean Rochefort and Johnny Hallyday are, respectively, a sedate retired teacher and an brooding thief who each get a taste of how the other half lives when the first lets the second, who's in town to rob the local bank, use a room in his crumbling house. Director Patrice Leconte's relaxed French drama lets the warmth between the two emerge convincingly and the two stars' underplayed performances give it an appealing intimacy. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

The Matrix Reloaded ★★½

This spotty sequel to 1999's pop culture touchstone holds true to the theory that the middle movie is usually the weakest in trilogies (that's assuming next fall's third movie is better). Where the first was intimate and tightly constructed, the new movie is less specific in its internal logic and has a large scale that is sometimes clumsy (including council meetings and war talk reminiscent of, yikes, The Phantom Menace). The sequel seems even more like a videogame than the first, in its increasingly elaborate, animation-dependent fight scenes (which come off as self-parody at times) and in the "leveled" structure (fight to see the Oracle, move up to fight to see the Keymaker, move up to fight your way into the Source, etc.). The heavies have all the fun this time, including Hugo Weaving's Agent Smith, who can now replicate himself at will, and the snippy Frenchman played by Lambert Wilson. Not bad, but not as satisfying as hoped. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

A Mighty Wind ★★★½

In Christopher Guest's latest improvised mockumentary, following Waiting for Guffman and Best in Show, Eugene Levy and Catherine O'Hara dominate as a one-time folk duo and romantic couple that reunites for a memorial concert with other groups. As the fallen idol who's had a rough three decades since, Levy is hilariously zonked out, but he and O'Hara sing so well together that their scenes are also disarmingly sweet and touching. Guest and This Is Spinal Tap cohorts Michael McKean and Harry Shearer also score together as their "other" musical project, the Folksmen, though the characters are underdeveloped as individuals. Meanwhile, as always, Fred Willard nearly steals the show. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Only the Strong Survive ★★½

It's not the style of documentary filmmakers D.A. Pennebaker and Chris Hegedus to do formal interviews or enhance their footage with much background information. But some shaping might have given focus to this meandering series of visits with 1960s soul stars such as Sam Moore, Jerry Butler and the irrepressible Rufus Thomas, who has since died. Some of the footage of recent performances is fine—Moore singing "When Something Is Wrong With My Baby," Mary Wilson doing "Some Day We'll Be Together," Butler on the title song—and the banter between Thomas and his radio partner, Jay Michael Davis, is a hilarious Greek chorus. But literally and musically the movie is all over the map. If you're not already a fan, you probably won't get much out of this; if you are a fan, you'll enjoy much of what's here, but be disappointed by a missed opportunity. (At Kendall Square.)

Owning Mahowny ★★★

Director Richard Kwietnowski, who previously made Love and Death on Long Island (about a stuffy author's sudden infatuation with a heartthrob actor), takes us on another intriguing journey through the obsession raging within one man's mind. This time, it's a fastidious assistant bank manager (Philip Seymour Hoffman) with a gambling jones. He starts embezzling money from the bank, so he can gamble to pay off his debts—and then, because he loses more, he embezzles some more, and so on. His quiet desperation has a fascinating car-crash quality, and is all the more compelling because the movie is based on a true story. (At Kendall Square.)

Keanu Reeves, star of 1999's hit The Matrix, returns for the sequel, The Matrix Reloaded.

The Shape of Things ★★

Neil LaBute's latest play raises interesting questions about the compromises that go into a romantic relationship, but he gives it a clumsy transition to the screen. The mannered performances, unnatural dialogue and casting of actors in their early 30s to play college students all make it hard to get involved in his story of the relationship between an art student (Rachel Weisz) who works hard to make her nebbish boyfriend (Paul Rudd) physically and emotionally "better," and the effect that relationship has on two of his friends (Gretchen Mol, Frederick Weller). LaBute doesn't treat his characters with quite as much contempt as he sometimes has, but they still feel like abstractions rather than anything the least bit real. (At Copley Place and Harvard Square.)

Spellbound ★★★½

Here's a movie that allows you to feel a bit better about our country. Jeffrey Blitz's documentary follows eight junior high schoolers with a magnificent obsession: they're all contestants in the 1999 National Spelling Bee. The movie takes them from their regionals through the Washington, D.C., finals, and it has quirky charm to spare. The kids make up an impressively broad cross-section—boys and girls, city and country, white and of color—and the bee really brings their families together, and lets these smart kids, often misfits in their hometowns, bond with others like themselves. The finals also generate more dramatic tension than any other movie this year, by far. (At Coolidge Corner.)

X2: X-Men United ★★★

The first one did nothing for me, but the X-Men sequel is a looser and more entertaining experience than its stiff predecessor. Perhaps it's the plot about a government higher-up (Brian Cox) who's determined to start a war that gives the sequel an extra timeliness. Cox, Patrick Stewart and Ian McKellen all give sly performances, Hugh Jackman gets tough-guy laughs as the Eastwood-esque Wolverine, Halle Berry and Famke Janssen kick sci-fi butt, and Alan Cumming has joined the cast as a creepy little mutant. The plot is much more focused and under control than the first time around, and the only real problem here is that the climax drags on, and on. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Spree for All

Former members of Tripping Daisy find a new wardrobe and communal cause for celebration in the Polyphonic Spree

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

When the 20-plus members of the Polyphonic Spree take the stage in their white robes to play uplifting songs of love and celebration, it's an experience that has been likened to everything from the Flaming Lips to the Fifth Dimension, from the Beach Boys' Pet Sounds to the musical Godspell.

It's an unusual event, especially in a rock club like the Paradise, where the choral-symphonic pop band from Texas makes its Boston debut June 6-7.

"The timing is perfect for this band," says Polyphonic Spree bassist Mark Pirro, on the phone from his Dallas home. "The attitude of popular music over the past 10 or 15 years has been on the dark side, and that's a good emotion to be in touch with in music, but it's time for something else."

All 20-plus members of the Polyphonic Spree plan to pack the Paradise stage June 6-7.

The idea for "something else" came from Spree frontman Tim DeLaughter, Pirro's former bandmate in Tripping Daisy, the psychedelic pop group best known for its 1995 hit "I Got a Girl." When Tripping Daisy imploded in the wake of guitarist Wes Berggren's 1999 death from a drug overdose, DeLaughter dropped out of music for a year to spend time with his family, then came up with the concept of a large group to express the sounds in his head.

"Polyphonic would not have been possible if some of those tragedies had not transpired—it was an inspiration for Tim, and just putting the band together was some kind of therapy," Pirro says. "The name was defining in terms of 'polyphonic' meaning many sounds and 'spree' meaning an extravaganza of sorts. Then, after he got the band together, all of a sudden he springs these robes on us, like 'We're all gonna be wearing these.'

"I thought, OK, I trust Tim, and this might be cool," Pirro says. "He didn't want the band appearing in street clothing because he thought that would be distracting to the theme."

Although the white robes could give the impression of a church choir or a cult group, Pirro sees them as a positive element. "It's a way to unify the band and has that sort of church choir feel to it," he says, "but everyone is all over the map as far as subscription to spirituality."

"There is no agenda with this band other than to entertain people," Pirro says. "As individuals, we all have good days and bad days. We don't walk around with smiles on our faces. But when we get together and perform, it's infectious."

Infectious enough to recruit members quite easily, swelling the ranks from an original 13 musicians to as many as 24, including about a dozen people in the chorus alone. Over time, instruments such as timpani and tabla drums, flutes and horns, strings and synthesizer, classical harp and theremin all made their way into the band.

Like many other newcomers, trombonist James Reimer fell in love with the group and just showed up at a rehearsal one day.

"It's the chance to pull from my little treasure chest of creativity, to add to this mix, and everyone's sort of that way," says Reimer, who hails from a day job as a computer technician and joined the band after it finished its first CD. "We kind of have it fine-tuned to a science now. It's not always about the individual."

That CD, The Beginning Stages of...the Polyphonic Spree, was released on the group's own Good Records in 2000, although, Reimer says, it was never really meant to be released. "It was made to get gigs, so club owners and managers wouldn't freak out: 'How's this not going to sound like a cacophony of crap?' Now it has sorta become a nice, little endearing record."

The disc became a hit in England, where the group played the Reading Festival and Royal Festival Hall. Now the Spree is spreading the word at home, including a festival sweep of Coachella in California, Bonnaroo in Tennessee and, the day after the Paradise shows, Field Day, a Long Island campout headlined by Radiohead and the Beastie Boys. And both Pirro and Reimer say the band's second CD, which DeLaughter has been busy mixing, is "epic" in sound, and more characteristic of their live shows.

"I'm just amazed at the kind of progress this band has made in such a short amount of time," Pirro says. "I'm sure there are a lot of people out there saying, '24-piece band. I've got to see this,' just for the pure spectacle of it, but we do a good job of delivering. Every show is very energetic."

But how do they get more than 20 people on small stages like the one at the Paradise? "It's like a big game of Tetris," Reimer says. "We sometimes get a little close onstage, but that's all right. It's not as close as we are on the bus." iB

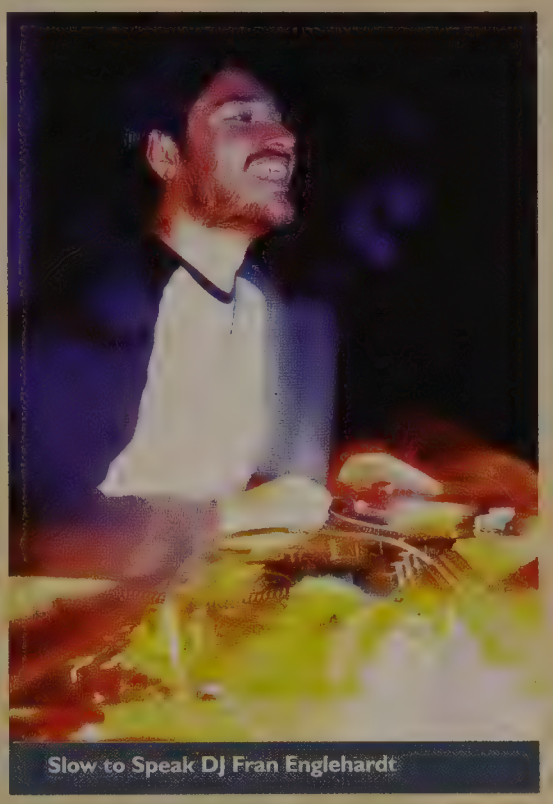
Dirty Talk

The Slow to Speak DJ collaborative plays Dirty Mind, a new kind of party at the Jorge Hernandez Cultural Center



Slow to Speak DJ Fran Englehardt

Fran Englehardt, Paul Nickerson and Keith Donaldson, the musical minds behind DJ collaborative Slow to Speak, are devoted to keeping the soul and spirit of dance music alive. Englehardt and Nickerson are probably best known around town as the creators of the deep-house party Life at the former Lava Bar. Though both have since relocated to New York, they still make their sound heard on WMBR-FM every Sunday morning from 2 to 4 am. On May 31, Slow to Speak will join forces with Kevin Figueiredo's 3sevens nightlife promotions project to present Dirty Mind, a special event at the Jorge Hernandez Cultural Center in the South End.

Dirty Mind party-goers can expect to find a musical space where anything from Hugh Masekela to Kevin Yost is fair game. The Slow to Speak moniker was inspired by a Biblical verse that reads, "be quick to listen, slow to speak and slow to anger." "It describes our approach to compiling and sequencing music," Donaldson says, "one that begets genuine appreciation for the work, its presentation and the audience."

In addition to music and dance, promoter Figueiredo's plans for the night include "copper, leather and feather" fashions by Conrad Lamour, sexually explorative photography, as well as "inhibited people," who, he says, will be chained to the walls until midnight and then set free onto the dance floor. Figueiredo's hoping to achieve a "sensory overload" reminiscent of New York City's legendary Mudd Club, combining fashion, performance art, sexuality, and photography with dance music. Slow to Speak's Nickerson says the DJs will play whatever music suits the mood: "After all, a dope jam is a dope jam!" —Daniel Spurling

Boston Boasts Bel Canto

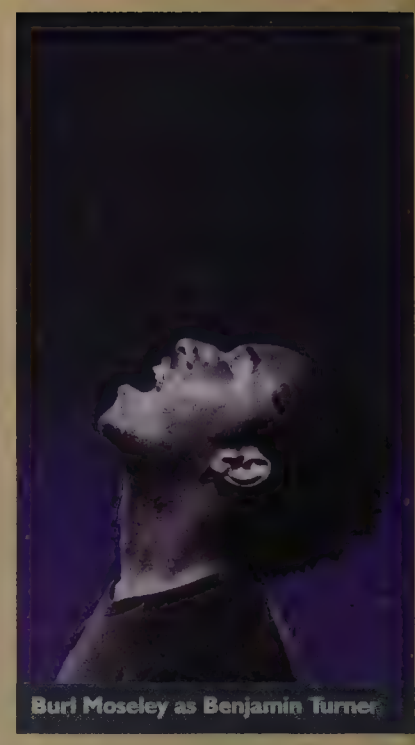
Wheelock Family Theatre teams up with the Theater Offensive



Burl Moseley as Benjamin Turner

Boston, along with the rest of the country, is used to getting New York's hand-me-downs in terms of theater, but a new work premiering in town boasts a pedigree fit for Broadway. Playwright Daniel Alexander Jones' Bel Canto is skipping NYC and will make its world premiere June 5 under the direction of Robbie McCauley at the Wheelock Family Theatre. Set in Jones' hometown of Springfield, Mass., in 1978, Bel Canto (Italian for "beautiful song") stars Burl Moseley as Benjamin Turner, a biracial, gay 16-year-old boy from Berkeley, Calif., who has recently moved to town. On his journey to sexual and self-discovery, Benjamin juggles the influences of his struggling mother, opera diva Marian Anderson, Jimi Hendrix and a handsome classmate.

Jones, who was named one of American Theatre magazine's artists to watch in the 21st century, penned the play (not to be confused with Ann Patchett's novel of the same name) during a year-long residency at GLBT theater company the Theater Offensive. The script was one of six plays chosen for development at Utah's Sundance Institute Play Lab in 2002. Now it's prepped and ready to go, thanks to the unlikely collaboration between TTO and the Wheelock Family Theatre. TTO artistic director Abe Rybeck says of the play, "It's just so gorgeous—two beautiful guys and a wonderful relationship. It really helps identify what's missing in the image of America. With all patriotic fervor going on, people are narrowing their idea of what America can be." 180 The Riverway, Boston* (617-734-4760). www.thetheateroffensive.org. *June 5-22. improperimpersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to typ up e-mailed messages) and write to:

RECENT CORRESPONDENCE FOLLOWS.

Red Line Woman

To the woman whose presence chased away the monotony of my morning commute: It was the morning of May 6. We boarded the T around 7:30 am at Porter Square. We sat down and a dialog began through body language, fleeting glances and chemistry. You are tall, about 5' 8" I guesstimate, with shoulder-length, highlighted, wavy brownish hair. What struck me most, though, were your light-brown eyes; they reminded me of amber. You were wearing black pants and a black coat. Your top was red and matched your nails. You were carrying a pink and white "V.S." bag, drinking coffee and reading the Metro. Intrigued by it all, I exited the train at Downtown Crossing after asking you if you read the IMPROPER BOSTONIAN. You smiled knowingly and responded that you did. I would enjoy seeing if your internal qualities match your extenal beauty. On my way out I looked back to catch another glimpse of you, and saw a light in your eyes and a smile on your face as you watched me depart. Hopefully, reading this is having the same effect. Contact me. To prove it's you, share your perspective and remembered details.

Red Hair & DLR!

I saw you on the night of May 7 on the Green Line headed toward Park Street. I got on at Kenmore and you were already on the train. You've got red short hair and a bag with Invader Zim patches, various pins (including David Lee Roth & "Emo Sucks"), and awesome black-and-white oxford shoes. I was the guy with the leather jacket and pin-covered bag. We had a great chat. Why on Earth didn't I ask for your name?! You got off at Copley. I hope to hell and DLR himself that you see this and get in touch. I'd really like to see you again.

—Train_In_Vain@newcastleunited.fcmail.co.uk

Won by a Nose

It was a Monday night. You were riding the C line and happened to sit next to me. You mentioned the joy of public transportation. You also noticed the guy in front of us picking his nose. You made me laugh when you said it's humankind at its best, and I said it's more like at its worst. I didn't have a chance to talk more but wanted to thank you for putting a smile on my face!

My Lucky Day

A year ago at this time, I noticed a beautiful blonde walk into my office building. We made brief eye contact, and she went her own way. Hesitant to approach her, I then considered writing an Improper Impersonal, like so many others do, but in the end I changed my mind. I got her number, called her, and the rest, as they say, is history. As I waited at your door the night of our first date, I was excited, yet very nervous. You looked stunning, made me laugh over and over again, and I knew after one date that we had something special. Now that a year has passed, I thank you for a wonderful time of memories and laughter. You have made me a better, more complete man and are my very best friend and the love of my life. I look forward to a lifetime of wonderful memories and a rewarding life together...and I encourage all of you to go talk to that special someone who catches your eye....you never know. Happy anniversary, Aimes.

—Dites

Lovely Philosopher

It was April 27, about 5pm. You wanted to buy Hume's Moral Philosophy from me but my store had no more copies. I directed you to Rodney's Used Books in Central Square and somewhere in the process made you laugh. You have a beautiful laugh and a smile to match. You left to bike your way down Mass Ave. and I thought, "this is a person I'd like to see more of." So here is my effort in that regard. Whether I see you again or not, you should know that you made my day.

—moraulf@hotmail.com

Response to "Liberals Suck"

Hey Mr. "Can't walk two feet without being chastised for my political beliefs" (Improper Impersonals, May 14). There is a saying that applies to you: If you can't stand the heat... The reasons you are looked at like an idiot for supporting Bush should be self-evident to you, so move back down South where you can blend in with the rest of the reactionary fake patriots who are proud of their double-digit IQs. Why don't you do the region a favor and leave?

—Liberal with Sharp Teeth

Stay Out of My Bedroom You Psycho Stalker

We met about a year ago at Aria. We hung out and had a great time. You stood me up once and then had the nerve to beg for forgiveness. I was a fool and fell for it. You stood me up again and I wrote you off. After a year of silence, you show up on a Sunday morning in my bedroom and then bolt as soon as I'm conscious! Just because I forgot to lock the door does not give you the right to let yourself into my apartment. If you want to talk to me be a real man and pick up the phone Otherwise, if you're going to stalk m at least bring me coffee! And a bagel. you cheap bastard! I hate you. Call me, please. I'm desperate and horny.

Hot Guy, Cute Dog and the Peace Sign

You were walking your dog on Walnu Street in Natick. I am the girl with r hair who was pushing a stroller with two little girls (I'm their nanny). You have dark hair, friendly eyes and a cute golden retriever, not to mention fabulous smile. You waved goodbye and flashed me the peace sign. I wou love to get together for a drink and get to know you. I keep thinking about you and see you often in the area. If you are interested, e-mail m and we'll see where it goes.

—A fireflyits@yahoo.com

Beautiful

Thanks for joining me on a trip dow memory lane. Our surprise lobster dinner was great. The only thing better than the beach at sunset was being there with you. We'll have a great summer together, if you'll have me. You are the best. Love,

—Yanni

Luiz

Where are you? July 2002, Falmouth Cape Cod, Main Street: It was a beautiful summer day and you were walking. I stopped and offered you a ride to Stop 'n' Shop. You accepted. You are Brazilian and handsome, wit dark hair and eyes and pale skin. Yo birthday is July 4. Now you live in Somerville and are studying at Harvard. I think of you often. Life is short and I'm dedicated to improvin your eternal state. E-mail me again.

Attention Tall Shopper

It was around 6:30 pm on May 18 (Sunday) at Shaw's by the Pru. We didn't engage in the unbridled starin contest that, unresolved, usually precedes one of these postings, but I think we noticed each other noticing each other. At least, I couldn't miss you, at 6' 4" or more, and in Reef sandals no less! (Thus giving you at least 4 inches on me in mine.) I was one aisle away and would've scaled the candy rack to do a back-to-back comparison, but then that guy tripp the emergency exit alarm. I was the ponytailed blonde in gym shorts and Reefs. E-mail me if you see this and would like to browse the produce section together sometime.

rockie horoscope

GEMINI MAY 21-JUNE 20

ou will not only put some money where your mouth is but also make a considerable onation to an organization you still have faith in. The ACLU? Ozzfest? Idols, ideals, lusions and income are so intertwined right now, it'll be difficult to separate the real eal from the wannabe. Since career concerns are about to change radically, who knows hat your next assignment will be or what skill you'll be adding to your resume? Just be lad that Saturn leaving your sign takes that sense of impending doom with it.

CANCER

wo new moons in one month can make May memorable in nore ways than you realize. Starting two separate gendas—one dealing with your standing at work, nother about friends or your affiliation with a group—ould put more on your plate than a picky Crab needs now nat summer, your season in the sun, is almost here. After tern Saturn moves into your sign June 2, those born near ne Gemini cusp may be given additional responsibilities nd, consequently, a lot more respect. Now is the time to et down to serious business.

LEO

ULY 23-AUGUST 22

re you eccentric, inventive or just way ahead of the curve? ou'll find out which one the first time your sun ruler quares erratic Uranus in Pisces. This new challenge can be uite different than the ones issued over the past seven ears, when Uranus was in your Aquarius complement. From ow on, the test results, while surprising, shouldn't be as isruptive. Some relationships may still be hard to decipher, ut lucky Jupiter in Leo will protect you from whatever ricks nebulous Neptune in your partnership house has up s sleeve.

VIRGO

UGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

ike the Lion, the Virgin could also be waiting for test esults from the sun's first significant challenge to Uranus your Pisces house of partners. Which relationship will be haken up? Who will introduce a new element to the urrent setup, and how weird might that be? Since lovable enus has joined up with your Mercury ruler, the next six eeks should be very social, and you, exceptionally opular. You'll also be able to express yourself with grace, nagination and wit instead of intimidating your audience ith details and data.

LIBRA

EPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

espite having high hopes for a happy and/or a judicious nding, you may have to choose between the lesser of two evil" alternatives. Should you lend your good name to a omestic matter that reeks of duplicity and doubt, or should ou support someone who is willing to buy your approval? lis or her generosity knows no bounds, but because your enus ruler can put you in a compromising position—reedy and gullible—you can't count on the customary troke of Libran luck to get you out of this dilemma. nteresting.

SCORPIO

CTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

o work or not to work, and what exactly for? The final pposition between musical, mystical Neptune in your home ase and enthusiastic, expansive Jupiter in your career nidheaven should end any further vacillating on your part. While Jupiter promises prosperity and protection, Neptune resents a pretty picture of domestic bliss. Reality comes nto play when your mate adds his or her two cents' worth, hich, for another next month, will be invaluable. If you an't make a decision, let your partner do it.

SAGITTARIUS

OVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

hould you hold to your altruistic, artistic principles or try o make a profit? As your protective Jupiter ruler confronts idealistic Neptune for the last time in what'll seem like ages (12 years), you could be forced into a life-altering decision. And while neither option is detrimental, one will make you happier than the other. Don't flip a coin; Venus and Jupiter, your good luck charms, are out of synch this week.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

The little things that mean a lot will come to mean a lot more once your Saturn ruler moves into Cancer for the next 30 months. Your daily routine—feed the dog, pick up the cleaning, go to work, pay the Visa bill—can become a source of satisfaction simply because Saturn will be in an emotional water sign that nurtures your innate earthiness. A stronger, more fulfilling relationship with a partner develops when Saturn crosses into your marriage house. And that depends on whether your birthday is in late December or January.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Some call it spirituality and others, bullshit, but no matter what your opinion is about faith-based issues, this week, there's way too much of it. Nebulous Neptune in your sign is projecting an aura or saintliness and self-sacrifice. An enthusiastic, well-funded partner could urge you to have even greater expectations, and suddenly your folks are making a million demands. Where's that weekend yoga retreat when you need it? Thank God the versatile Gemini new moon introduces alternative ways of handling domestic matters.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Since your Neptune ruler is in Aquarius, and their ruling planet, Uranus, is in Pisces for the next seven years, Fish will be aware of a lot more if you read for both signs. Make it a habit. Same goes for the Water Bearers. Tell them to pay attention to the debut of the sun's square to Uranus; how that challenge plays out can set the stage for scenes along similar lines in the future. Expect to be enlightened because Uranus awakens as well as disturbs. As for Neptune and the vision/scam you're promoting, try to tone it down.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Your friends may think that you're simply being sociable, showing up without much arm-twisting and earning brownie points along the way. Could it be that accommodating others is part of your grand scheme? While your Mars ruler makes its way through inventive Aquarius, you're bound to come up with something uniquely your own. Since money will play an integral part in whatever is begun at the solar eclipse on the 30th, for the next three months, acquiring and distributing the bucks might be the best trip you can take.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Promote yourself. This is the best time in quite a while to get the word out, display your talent and make sure other people know about it. While Mercury, the press agent, merges with your tasteful Venus ruler in your own sign—not that common an occurrence—don't take any opportunity offered for granted or assume there'll be another one around the corner. The air of glamour surrounding you now helps attract someone of importance next week. Won't you be surprised!

Central air conditioning

for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat.

If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort® system doesn't require large metal ductwork, or major remodeling.

Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort® offers Lennox high efficiency air conditioning.

Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

LOTS OF POPS, NO WEASELS...

Keith Lockhart with a Pops-a-tini

It seems like only yesterday that snappy crackling Pops conductor Keith Lockhart took up Arthur Fiedler's baton, but in fact, it was nine years ago, as he pointed out at the party preceding Opening Night at Pops. While big-ticket donors supped in style in a nearby ballroom at the Copley Plaza, younger supporters had drinks and little nibbly things in the Oak Bar. To toast the occasion, all were offered a new cocktail unveiled for the occasion: the Pops-a-tini, which is a Cosmo made with white cranberry juice and served in a martini glass rimmed with red sugar. (Two words: sickly sweet.)

Then it was off to Symphony Hall for the main event, where the hoi polloi could mix and mingle with the rarefied likes of velvet-voiced broadcaster Ron Della Chiesa and the magnificent Joyce; journalistic eminence grise John Henning; TV entertainmentatrix Sara Edwards; real estate titan Mark Goldweitz; the stunning Marilyn Keane and her husband, John; Cambridge doyenne Ann Gund and ethereal beauty Stephanie Warburg; and former governor Mike Dukakis and his wife, Kitty (whose conductor father, Harry Ellis Dickson, died recently and was honored by Lockhart & Co. that night).

All in all, a highly civilized evening, and a sure sign that tuxedo season is coming to a close while concerts on the Esplanade are just around the corner.

NAMASTÉ...

It's somewhat ironic that the Devine Rose Ball, a benefit for the Carroll Center for the Blind, was such a feast for the eyes.

To begin with, there was the setting—cocktails in the little Versailles-like salon of the Copley Plaza, followed by dinner in the Oval Room (one of the prettiest places in the city to have a party). Then there were the visuals, like a silent auction that rivaled an afternoon at Saks and gigantic, cascading arrangements of roses, lilacs and whatnot in towering silver vases. Of course, the crowning glory was the smiling faces of such gentlefolk as Roy Orbison lookalike and charming raconteur Brian Charlson; fashion plate Paula Jaq'lyn and her other half, George Brown; Jaq'lyn's sister, Carol Campo; the diamond bedecked Natalie Gardiner and her adoring husband, John Hambright; presidential descendant Sarah Adams; furniture scion Larry Rubin (the offspring of Bernie and Phyl of corny TV-commercial fame) and his wife, Brenda; the Sports Club L.A.'s stunning blond yoga goddess Bethany Cantin, and one young woman who lamented, "It's parties like this that make me wish I knew how to waltz."

Speaking of stunning blond yoga goddess Bethany Cantin, here's how the rest of her night unfolded: After crashing the Oliver Ames High School prom, where she shook her groove thing with some 17-year-olds to Nelly's "Hot in Herre," she swooped into the Boston Public Library's Spring Gala, where she watched her date arm-wrestle Channel 5 babe-a-licious glamazon Liz Brunner, and then it was off to Saint for a nightcap (or two), squired by the admiring trio of hunky news anchor David Muir, city councillor Mike Ross and model Jeff Bellows.

No wonder yoga's becoming so popular.

SOME CHANGE IS FOR THE BETTER...

The Brahmin Old Guard was in a bit of a tizzy when the blue-blooded do-gooding women of the Vincent Club announced a hiatus in their century-old tradition of putting on an original musical to raise money for women's health at Vincent Memorial Hospital. Instead, they mounted the Gardenia Ball, a black-tie hootenanny of epic proportions, at the Park Plaza.

Present and accounted for: department store heiress and upper-crust party-thrower Hope Baker; Wellesley-bred stockbroker Caroline Coco; her impossibly charming parents, Hannalou and Sam; Chestnut Hill sparkler Vicky Whitney; bright young Beacon Hill things Tess and Sam Atkinson and Betsy and Charlie Gifford; assorted Cabots, Hunnewells and Gardners; and so on and so forth.

On the downside: Unlike in years past, guests didn't get to see the club's members doing "drill," a Rockettes-style kick-line number that was always the highlight of the show. But on the upside, husbands got to dance with their wives, which probably more than made up for it.

THE CUTTING EDGE...

It's hard to imagine a more Manhattanish party than the ICA's Sapphire Necklace Gala at the Cyclorama.

For starters, the guest list was worthy of Studio 54, including, as it did, assorted members of the Fidelity Investments Johnson clan (Abbie, Beth and Edward, along with their respective spouses); arts patrons Ann and Marvin Collier; venture capitalist Sheryl Marshall and her art collector husband, Howard Selwyn; board member Andy Goldfarb and his bubbly bride, Rachael; Mass General ER hottie Clay Lawrence; Boston Ballet artistic director Mikko Nissinen; modern-day Warhol girls Glynis Hobika and Leigh Weatherly; PR siren Lynn Kortenhaus; board chair Vin Cipolla; celebrity hairstylist Mario Russo; fashion-forward socialites Vivien and Alan Hassenfeld (a.k.a. Mr. and Mrs. Hasbro Toys); and others of their eclectic and interesting ilk.

Then there was the entertainment, which included the raffling off of prizes like an important piece of jewelry and a rainbow-painted car, not to mention the performance artist who came onstage and danced around on broken glass before lying down in it, putting a cinderblock on her stomach and having her assistant smash it with a sledgehammer, which prompted one wit to say: "I'll bet she doesn't mind eating crackers in bed." iB

At the ICA gala, from top: Cheryl Richardson and Max Dilley; Glynis Hobika, Janet Wu and Rachael Goldfarb; Donna Montgomery, Mikko Nissinen and Collette Royer.

SUMMER FLAVOR

At the cover shoot for this issue on Summer Dining, the design staff found themselves in the uncomfortable position of having to cook something for a woman who had just been named the best chef in the Northeast by the James Beard Foundation. True, all they had to do was boil a pot of spaghetti. What's more, the pasta would not be eaten but would serve as a prop in the photos. Still, they approached the task nervously, aware that Barbara Lynch was just a few feet away, chatting with the photographers.

Of course the pasta came out clumpy and unphotogenic, but Lynch came to the rescue, salvaging the botched batch with a little olive oil as the staff retreated sheepishly. (In the end, we didn't use the chef-with-pasta shots, though, deciding the tomatoes better captured the summer dining season.)

Whether you're a Lynch wannabe or just someone who loves good food, there's something in this issue for you. Lynch's interview with Jonathan Soroff (page 14) offers inspiration for anyone with culinary ambitions. "Hog Heaven" (page 24) takes you inside the world of the New England Barbecue Society, and a guide to farmers' markets (page 26) points the way to some of the season's freshest produce, meats and more. For Italophiles and foodies with a sweet tooth, "A Scoop of Italy" (page 28) highlights authentic gelato spots around the city.

We've even thrown in some recipes from chefs who grow their own herbs in "'Tis the Seasoning " (page 18). If you're kitchen-phobic, note that two recipes don't require that unfamiliar appliance, the stove. Better yet, head to the restaurants where any of these chefs work to sample their summer masterpieces.

TAYLOR MADE

Thank you, IMPROPER, for finally giving Taylor Twellman "proper" face time with your latest cover (May 28)! Lord knows he's been giving us plenty of enjoyable face time ever since he joined the New England Revolution! Move over David Beckham—Taylor Twellman is the real hottie!

PS: Soroff's interview was just as hot as Taylor's pictures—if that's possible!

TAMING THE MEAN STREETS

I've been an avid bike rider for more than 20 years and really enjoyed Susan Abbattista's recent article about urban bike riding (May 28).

I have one other thought to add. When I first started riding a lot, I lived in Sarasota, Fla., and rode my bike everywhere. In particular, I had to ride my bike through a poor section of town to get to work early in the morning. I got to know many of the "characters" that hung out in the neighborhood, and began to frequent some of the retail establishments on my route. I felt safe and part of the community.

I still don't like riding in the city. The car traffic and potholes make it too dangerous. But I'm sure that bike riding can make one more appreciative of the communities in which we live.

—JOHN MUELLER
Beverly

I was interested to read Susan Abbattista's account of her foray into the world of cycling in Boston. As another pretty new road cyclist, I had a similar experience, getting "doored" on one of my morning commutes. I agree that one has to be a little crazy to bike in Boston, but a number of things keep me on the road. I love the freedom of riding my bike, how fresh the air feels when I pick up speed, as well as the alertness I need to maintain—as opposed to sinking into a stupor as I would commuting on the T or the bus.

REV IT UP

Ezra Dyer's droptops article in the last issue (May 28) was a very good read. It wasn't just another fluffy automotive fill-in piece blatantly tied in to magazine sponsors, but, refreshingly, contained clear, in-depth specifications and comparisons. Ezra's depth of knowledge is revealed by his comments about the target audience for Honda's unique Element and Saab's monetary problems, among other insights. Speaking of which, how about something on hybrids—an automotive topic du jour to be sure? They're ideal city vehicles, too.

URBAN ISLAND

A little while back, a book called Tiki Road Trip crossed our desk. The premise was intriguing—author James Teitelbaum lists, describes and reviews nearly every known Tiki bar and Polynesian restaurant in the United States and abroad. But we wondered aloud, "Does anyone go to Tiki bars anymore?" We pushed it aside, and thought nothing more of it until we heard that nightlife impresario Patrick Lyons had opened a new restaurant called [dramatic pause] the Tiki Room.

The Tiki Room offers tasty Polynesian treats.

So we pulled out the book from under a stack of papers and read that Tiki, which had its heyday in the 1950s and '60s, is indeed making a quiet resurgence. Within the last couple of years, a handful of trendy Tiki bars have opened in New York City, among other places.

That Patrick Lyons...he's always ahead of the curve. But did we mention that the Tiki Room is on Lansdowne Street of all places? Kitschy Tiki decor, torch lighting, Polynesian food and low-key music are about the last things you'd expect in Boston's nightclub central. But if anyone can pull it off, it's Lyons, whose laundry list of successes includes Kings, Lucky's and Sonsie.

Located in the former Jake Ivory's, the Tiki Room is a far cry from its night-owl neighbors. First off, it's a restaurant—the only one on Lansdowne. The menu is based on pu pu platters. We suggest the "build-your-own" option (it's the most fun), where you can choose from offerings like barbecued spareribs, cashew chicken spring rolls, crab-stuffed mushroom caps, fried calamari and gingered shrimp wontons. Select three sauces—from curried pineapple and ginger chutney to peanut sauce to banana guava ketchup—and then sit back with a Tiki-tini and survey the surroundings, a motley assortment of Tiki torches, lamps and statues salvaged from Cambridge's Aku Aku when it closed a few years ago.

A word of warning before you go. According to Tiki Road Trip, German ethnologist Karl Woerman once said about Tikis: "Once you have seen them, you are haunted as if by a feverish dream." One Lansdowne St., Boston (617-351-2580). —Erin Hagedorn and Julie Short

WATER WORKS

Ever since bottled water staked a claim at the dinner table, restaurants have begun to import it from sources all over the globe. Some conducted staff taste tests, while others tried out different brands to let the customers have their say. But whether their water's drawn in New York or Norway, all believe they've found the most deliciously tasteless accent to a long and leisurely meal. And the waters come in really cool bottles as well.

WBZ 4 WEATHER WIZARD BARRY BURBANK

Barry Burbank

This year, April showers did little more than bring wet weather and delay balmy spring conditions. Everyone wants to know: Will the sun ever come out and play? As he rounds the corner on 25 years in the biz, WBZ 4 veteran meteorologist Barry Burbank lets us in on his summer forecast.

IB: When can we expect to pack up our jackets and crank the AC?

BB: In the past couple of weeks there has been evidence that the pattern will switch to La Niña. If that happens, it will be a hotter and dryer summer. That's my best guess right now.

IB: Will the summer be as extreme as the winter?

BB: Mother nature tends to make up for what has happened in the past and make up in reverse. So long snowy weather might lead to hot weather. But there's not enough substantial evidence that will happen.

IB: Can we expect a summer equivalent of the Presidents' Day snowstorm?

BB: If we go into the La Niña pattern, it's better for hurricane formation, and some people out there think it might be very active hurricane season, which means a hotter summer. —Jessica Iredale

With 80 percent of all women coloring their hair, you can bet that some of us change colors as often as we change our minds. Blond is the must-have color right now, and you'll see it popping up everywhere. The blond that everyone is clamoring for is a beigey, pale shade like the one seen on Heidi Klum on the cover of last month's Elle. It isn't easy to get—I sent four people to local salons and only one came back with the right shade. But Jennifer Lenz from Salon Fontana did the job. "It's so hard to achieve this particular color of blond because when you lighten hair, it tends to become a warm color, like yellow or orange," says Lenz. "You have to do at least a double-process to achieve it, which takes time and someone who really knows color." She does. Salon Fontana in the Sports Club/LA, 4 Avery St., Boston (617-375-8510).—Samantha House

TOASTS OF THE TOWN

On the Bayou...Rouge chef Sal Fristensky is headed back to the Big Easy. The Cajun cook recently hung up his apron at Andy Husbands' South End eatery to open his own authentic wood-smoked barbecue restaurant in New Orleans. (Who can blame him after this hellish winter?) Though we'll miss Fristensky's Southern-style cuisine, there's no doubt that chef/owner Husbands will manage just fine without him—a new menu is already in rotation. "I'm really into it," Husbands says of his new lighter-fare selection.

Your Car Awaits...Everyone loves a free ride in a fancy car, and now everyone can have one—if you're hungry. Looking to free its patrons of Big Dig headaches and North End parking problems, Prince Street's G'Vanni's Ristorante is now offering free door-to-door car service for all diners in Boston (including Allston, Charlestown, Roxbury and Dorchester), Brookline and Cambridge. Diners are picked up at their doorstep and can expect to ride in style in a limousine, Mercedes or luxury coach. We can't think of a better reason to gorge, since you get chauffeured home when you're done, too. (800-326-1768).

A Little Assimilation...Fans of Harvard Avenue's popular all-Asian eatery Daiwa, fear not. It's not gone, it just revamped its menu and changed its name to Seatopia. The five-year-old restaurant is under the same ownership, but some of its dishes have been Westernized. The once strictly Asian menu now offers Western food prepared Japanese style, like the Tokyo hamburger and the omelette rice, as well as appetizers like avocado egg rolls. Manager Samantha Lee says she had intended to change the restaurant's entire concept, but decided against it when regulars voiced a strong "No." So what's with the name change? The sign was already ordered. 204 Harvard Ave., Allston (617-566-7344).

Somers Lovin'...Thanks to DeBeers' clever marketing team, grooms-to-be are expected to fork over three months' salary for their lovely lady's engagement ring. Once the hefty check is cut (and the cold feet start to set in), newly engaged couples are invited to head over to Kennedy's Midtown and take the edge off with a free champagne toast while their rings are sized next door at the Jewelers' Building. John J. Somers, owner of the Somers Pubs Group, is offering the complimentary bottle of bubbly as a gesture of goodwill toward Jewelers' Building merchants who regularly send clients to Kennedy's. The special is available "'til death do us part," says Somers. 42 Province St. Boston (617-426-3333).

City Slingers...If you think you're onto something with your personal mixology skills, now's the time to share them. Caffe Umbra is celebrating its new full-fledged liquor license with a contest to find the best original libation. Patrons are invited to stop in, grab a bite and leave their recipe in the bill fold. The five best concoctions make it to the final round, where some of The IMPROPER's Beloved Bartenders will choose a winner in a blind taste test July 8. The victor gets the drink named in his or her honor and put on the menu for all to enjoy, plus dinner for two on the house. 1395 Washington St., Boston (617-867-0707).—Jessica Iredale, E.H., J.S.

I Do

PREVIOUSLY ENGAGED

Talk about a romantic setting for an engagement: early morning on the banks of the Charles River, the mist rising off the water, the Harvard crew members rowing by. Now add a sweaty jogger and a well-worn pair of Nikes, and you've got the real-life tale of Terry and Jim Sanders. Their pal Kim Fine recently wrote us to tell the story of the couple's engagement. Every morning, Jim and Terry liked to go running along the Charles with her Walkman (while her lazy beau lounged in bed). One morning, Jim handed her a new tape of songs as she was leaving the apartment. Ten minutes into her run, the song stopped, and Jim's voice came through her headphones. "She slowed down for a few paces, and then stopped dead in her tracks," says Fine. On the tape, Jim told her how much he loved her, and then he asked her to marry him. "She spun around and there he was—his car following her," she says. The happy couple married recently. Terry resplendent in her wedding gown and running shoes.

Trendspotting

NICE CURVES

We first became aware of the Curves phenomenon (and we think it's fair to use the word "phenomenon" considering this women's gym chain is the third largest franchise in America) when we recently met up with Aunt Peggy. She'd lost 30 pounds and couldn't stop raving about Curves, a gym she'd joined that offers a full-body workout in a mere 30 minutes. Why hadn't we heard of it?

Turns out, the word on Curves is out—but mainly among women in the suburbs, where most of the gyms are located. "Our target is the woman who is uncomfortable going to a regular gym," says founder Gary Heavin. "We offer a place where women don't feel like they have to lose 10 pounds before they even show up." Women seem to be responding to the concept of a no-frills gym where they spend 30 seconds on each segment of an eight-machine circuit. By working the muscles at a faster pace, participants keep their heart rate up for cardio benefits while they strength-train. "We're the McDonald's of fitness—and luckily there is no Burger King," Heavin says.

Did he speak too soon? Boston Sports Clubs just unveiled what seems to be its version of Curves: XpressLine—a trainer-supervised, total-body strength workout that can be completed in just 22 minutes. It too features an eight-machine circuit.

What we want to know: Is there a Wendy's far behind? Curves: www.curvesforwomen.com; Xpress Line: www.nysc.com.—E.H. and J.S.

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Bye Bye Bingo...Monday night Bada Bingo at Via Matta is no more, and sadly, THE IMPROPER is partially to blame. It seems we unknowingly blew the whistle on the short-lived bingo night when the Gaming Commission read our write-up in the April 30 issue. Turns out, bingo, even when it's solely for charity, is legally considered gambling. (Via Matta raised $1,000 for the Italian Home for Children.) While it didn't exactly go down Casino-style, restaurant co-owner Christopher Myers reports, "They scared me. And they said they would take my liquor license away, so I said, 'Yes, Sir.'"

Orient Express...The South End's trendy home furnishings market expanded yet again with the mid-May addition of Red River Trading Company on Washington Street. Asian-influenced antiques, reclaimed teak furniture, wood-sculpted Buddhas and lacquered trunks grace the showroom floor in the company's debut retail space. Founders Jonathan Golnick and Frank Ormonde, both well versed in Asian art (Golnick collects and Ormonde owns a gallery in Notting Hill, London), deploy buying teams to China and Indonesia. After a glance at the Web site, particularly the Trail Tales link, it looks like the pair aims to do for furniture what J. Peterman did for clothes—whimsical stories and all. 1313 Washington St., South End (617-542-2223). www. redrivertradingco.com.

Dawson's Box...There wasn't a dry eye in the office the day after the Dawson's Creek finale. Not because Jen died or because Joey didn't marry Dawson, but because we could no longer tune in Wednesday nights to look for our blue IMPROPER newsbox that the show had borrowed as a stage prop. But it turns out the folks at the WB are considerate—instead of chucking it, they mailed our box back in tip-top shape. But while we can't count on DC anymore for our bit of free publicity, we still have our box popping up here and there on Boston Public. Hey—it's the little things in life, right?

Center Stage... Kudos to the directors and thespians of the American Repertory Theatre. The Cambridge stage company ranked third in Time magazine's recent list of the top five U.S. regional theaters. According to Time, regional theaters have been one-upping Broadway productions with state-of-the-art facilities, and the cream of the crop is in Harvard Square under the direction of Robert Woodruff. Check out the Rep's highly acclaimed Pericles and The Sound of a Voice, both currently playing.

Go Euro... Full service is the name of the game at Newbury's newest European boutique. Gipore opened May 30 in the space formerly occupied by Cigar Masters, and shop owner, stylist and designer Homeira is dead set on bringing the true European shopping experience to Boston. In addition to carrying scads of hard-to-find Italian labels, the boutique features a cappuccino, juice and Italian-water bar, a makeup line and personal styling/tailoring service to custom-fit new purchases and update old duds. Homeira and company are ready to re-create looks found in high-fashion magazines from head to toe with stylists, hairdressers and makeup artists on staff. They even offer a personal shopping service to bring exclusively European items stateside. Needless to say, it's not exactly the look for less. 176 Newbury St., Boston (617-424-1500).

Art Nouveau... Attention art buffs: The curtain lifts and the Peabody Essex Museum's $125 million transformation is revealed June 21. Closed since February for renovations, the 200-year-old museum is back in action with six new galleries, a glass atrium, interactive family center and a fully reconstructed Qing Dynasty house from Southeastern China. A weekend-long celebration begins at 10 am, and events include free concerts, storytelling and art-making activities for all ages. (866-745-1876). www.pem.org.

BUSTIN' KAPPS

The Phi Beta Kappa Society is Greek to me

My parents still take glee in the fact that when they asked me in fourth grade why I liked a particular girl in my class, I replied, "Because she gets her homework done on time." I'm not sure if I'm more amazed that I was already that much of a dork at age 9 or that I had any interest in girls whatsoever. The one clear memory I have of fourth grade is encouraging a kid named Jeff to stick a pair of scissors in a light socket, which shorted out half the classroom and earned him an audience with the principal. So I'll have to take mom and dad's word that I had a homework fetish.

I mention this because it appears that my attraction to smart, independent, successful broads hasn't changed. Dating a smart girl in college motivated me to drastically adjust my drinking-to-studying ratio, possibly even in favor of studying. Ultimately, though, she still whupped me like Stephen Hawking playing chess against Keanu Reeves. I'm all for women's equality, but women's total dominating superiority is a little hard on my ego.

Needless to say, then, I was extremely curious when I spied a newsletter on my girlfriend, Liz's floor with the words "Phi Beta Kappa" emblazoned across the top of the front page. "What's this?" I asked suspiciously. "I didn't know you were in a sorority." "That's the Key Reporter," she said. "It's the Phi Beta Kappa society newsletter. It only gets sent to people who are way smarter than you." OK, she didn't say that last part, but it's the truth. My old competitive fires sprung to life. I wanted to be in Phi Beta Kappa and get a newsletter. Never mind that the Key Reporter should be called the Dorkwad Daily and my GPA would be a more respectable ERA. I wanted in. So I sent an e-mail to Key Reporter editor and PBK director of PR Barbara Ryan, asking for help:

Dear Ms. Ryan,
A copy of the Phi Beta Kappa Society's newsletter, the Key Reporter, recently fell into my hands, and I greedily devoured each word until my intellectual belly was veritably distended (were I a bovine, I would have selected John Churchill's account of his newfound affinity for Tolstoy to chew as cud). My only regret is that I'd never heard of your fine organization until this week past. My petite amie, who has been a PBK member in good standing for some four years, informs me that members are typically elected in college based on academic merit. In my own case, I can only assume that there was some kind of grave oversight on the part of the election committee, for I was never contacted. As I earned my undergraduate degree in 1999, perhaps this was due to the widespread chaos caused by the Y2K bug.

I'm writing to ask you to correct this travesty by granting me a retroactive PBR membership. My qualifications, in brief:

- I managed a D+ in a calculus-based physics class without knowing a scrap of calculus. If I'd known a derivative from a deuteron I'm sure my grade would've been a full mark higher.
- I wrote a 50-page honors thesis on selected works by Raymond Carver. That's roughly five times longer than any of Carver's actual stories. To put that in perspective, my paper on War and Peace would total 7,500 pages, were I to write one.
- I had excellent school spirit. At one hockey game my senior year, I consumed the better part of a bottle of Captain Morgan's Original Spiced Rum and expressed my school spirit by standing shirtless in the bleachers and informing the opposing goalie that he was a sieve (and a strainer, and a colander—being an intellectual, I had many synonyms at hand to vary the metaphor) until I was removed by security.

I'M ALL FOR WOMEN'S EQUALITY, BUT WOMEN'S TOTAL DOMINATING SUPERIORITY IS A LITTLE HARD ON MY EGO

For the sake of modesty and brevity I'll stop there, but I would be happy to provide you with a transcript or any other documentation you may require to complete my application. I look forward to making up for lost time in the Phi Beta Kappa Society, and so does my brain.

Ezra H. Dyer

She didn't write back, so it seems I never will get a Phi Beta Krappa key. It's probably just as well. I've heard that their hazing rituals involve reading the periodic table until you throw up. And Liz assures me that I'm very erudite and I shouldn't be triste. For all I know, she could be right. iB

Soroff ON

BARBARA LYNCH

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Barbara Lynch, chef/owner of the acclaimed No. 9 Park, was raised in the projects of South Boston and discovered cooking in a high school home-economics class. After taking jobs at some of the top restaurant kitchens in Boston, she traveled through France and Italy, where she incorporated a European flair in her cooking. Upon her return to Boston, she became executive chef at Galleria Italiana, where she was named one of Food & Wine's "Ten Best New Chefs in America." In 1998, she opened No. 9 Park, which was named one of the "Top 25 New Restaurants in America" by Bon Appétit, one of the "Top 50 Restaurants in America" by Travel & Leisure and "Best New Restaurant" in Boston by Food & Wine. More recently, the James Beard Foundation named Lynch "Best Chef Northeast, 2003," an award determined by restaurateurs across the country. She recently completed a four-part series on pasta for the New York Times with author Mark Bittman, and she has appeared on such cooking shows as the Food Network's Cooking Live with Sara Moulton and Cooking Around Town with Ron Della Chiesa on WGBH. She was one of a handful of Bostonians to be profiled in the ABC-TV documentary series Boston 24/7, and she is the subject of a documentary titled Amuse Bouche: A Chef's Tale.

Jonathan Soroff: So what exactly does a James Beard award look like?

Barbara Lynch: It's a gold medal with the head of James Beard engraved or embossed on it, it's heavy, and it's on a yellow ribbon.

JS: Sort of like a Nobel Prize?

BL: [Laughs.] I haven't seen a Nobel Prize. I'm not sure I ever will.

JS: What does the award mean for you, either personally or for business?

BL: Personally, it's an amazing feeling. It's so wonderful to feel the recognition of your peers and colleagues. For business, I'm not sure what it does. It may make expectations a little bit higher. We need to raise the bar a little bit more because of the attention we'll get from James Beard followers.

JS: Worst thing about the restaurant business?

BL: The hours. I'm usually here 11:30 in the morning until 1 o'clock in the morning, five days a week.

JS: So it's impossible to have a home life?

BL: Unless you have a great husband, like mine, who does the laundry and the grocery shopping. It's really tough, especially when the restaurant is open for lunch and dinner, because you want to be here. I like to work with my staff. But, hey, it's the restaurant business. I chose this.

JS: Do female chefs have a harder time than their male counterparts?

BL: No. It's funny. I get asked that all the time, and I wish I had a better answer, but no. It's not harder, but it's probably different.

JS: How so?

BL: Less ego.

JS: Don't all chefs have big egos?

BL: I think you have to have an ego to be in this business, and to deal with both the criticism and the positive aspects. It's a must.

JS: One tool you can't live without in the kitchen?

BL: Potato ricer.

JS: That's what you'd take to a desert island?

BL: Well, if there were potatoes there, I guess.

JS: One spice you can't live without?

BL: Black pepper.

JS: Hardest thing for you to cook?

BL: For me, personally, probably a fish terrine. They never come out right. They're always dry and...I don't know...I'm bad at them.

JS: Easiest thing?

BL: For me it would be pasta.

JS: Any guilty pleasures when it comes to food?

BL: Yeah, fried stuff. Fried clams from Woodman's or the Clam Box. I also like making my own. We share a house in Gloucester and we do fried clams. But I like all fried foods.

JS: Biggest mistake that novice chefs make?

BL: Not being ready or organized or knowing how to work efficiently. Like if you're going to juice something, have all your carrots ready, chopped and peeled. Don't set up the juicer that takes up half the counter until you're ready to use it.

JS: Three people you'd most like to cook for?

BL: Well, Julia Child is always fun. I'd love to hang out with Katherine Hepburn. That'd be great. And maybe Daniel Boulud [a New York chef] or Waverly Root, the food historian who wrote The Food of Italy and The Food of France.

JS: Things that people just don't order when they're on the menu?

BL: We've had a hard time with sea urchin. It's not a huge seller here. Neither is rabbit.

JS: Most memorable meal you've ever had?

BL: Three years ago, at Taillevent in Paris.

JS: Best cook you know?

BL: My chef de cuisine, David Bazirgan.

JS: What would I find in your refrigerator at home?

BL: [Laughs.] You'd find peach marmalade, baby arugula, baby spinach, pieces of the roast chicken we had last night. Chocolate milk, ummm, Hot Pockets...

JS: Hot Pockets?!

BL: My stepson loves them. I don't eat them.

JS: One thing most people don't understand about the restaurant business but should?

BL: What it costs to run a restaurant. Not only the food product but labor and glassware, linen, china, menus, paper, bread, water. Those things are reflected in the price, and I wish people were more aware of the bigger picture.

JS: If the Food Network asked you to do a show, what would it be?

BL: It would have a theme, like how to entertain. How to do an elegant dinner party at home, how to do a picnic, how to roast a chicken...

JS: Are you a tyrant in the kitchen?

BL: Not really.

JS: What would your staff say if I asked them that?

BL: [Laughs.] They'd say, "On her good days, she's all right."

JS: What's your take on the phenomenon of celebrity chefs?

BL: My God, it's outta control! I don't know if it's a good thing or a bad thing. I suppose it's how you take it. It's definitely good for the restaurant business, which is nice because it's very hard to succeed in this business. The star thing makes me happy on that end. But taking a chef and putting him into rock 'n' roll status, like a superstar?! That's pretty frightening.

JS: Not to mention silly. Name three great places to buy food supplies in Boston.

BL: Formaggio's Kitchen, obviously, for cheese. For produce, I go to Wilson's Farm. And I'm a Trader Joe's girl.

JS: Do foodies take it all too seriously? I mean, after all, it's just food.

BL: No. Food is not just food. A customer who eats here probably can't go home and prepare a squab that was strangled, the neck taken off, roast the bones, make an incredible jus, cook it perfectly, with fresh porcini, a little brioche toast....I don't think foodies, the real food lovers, can ever get too serious. The more serious, the better. They challenge us to get better, so that you can taste every little thing that's in that dish. I depend on them.

JS: How about fad diets?

BL: [Laughs.] Oh, God, every month I'm on a different thing. Now it's the no-alcohol diet. Just kidding. I'm always trying to lose weight.

JS: Is there a food fad or trend you find annoying?

BL: I'm over big portions of food.

JS: Don't your customers expect that, though? Otherwise, they don't feel like they're receiving value.

BL: I think that's going away, and I hope that within the next five to 10 years we'll be back to the six-ounce piece of protein and three ounces of a carbohydrate, getting back to normal sizes. Right now, it's so over the top.

JS: What about the foam thing?

BL: It didn't last very long, did it? Is that still around?

JS: I think so.

BL: Yeah, well, that's something I think I dabbled in for a month and then I was over the whole canister thing. It didn't work out for me. But now a lot of people are doing gelatin. I like that.

JS: Most exotic thing you ever ate?

BL: I guess that barnacle that Ken Oringer did at Clio last year. I've also had live glass eels with marinated eggplant. I remember having that in Paris. The eels were close to being dead but still moving on the plate a bit, and they're hugely expensive, like $90 a pound or something.

JS: Microwave—pro or con?

BL: Here, we only use it to melt chocolate when necessary, for writing on a dessert or something. At home, I use it for tea. That's about it.

JS: Do you cook a lot at home?

BL: Only on Sundays, because that's when I'm there.

JS: Favorite cooking magazine?

BL: Ooh, who am I gonna piss off with this one? I guess The Art of Eating. It's a quarterly.

JS: How about your favorite cookbook?

BL: Le Grand Livre de Cuisine by Alain Ducasse. It's huge. It's all in French, and it's over 2,000 pages and has everything of his compiled, except the desserts. It's just savories. I don't think I'll ever get through the whole book.

JS: Last question: the one adjective you'd hope other people would use to describe your cooking?

BL: Refined. IB

I DON'T THINK FOODIES, THE REAL FOOD LOVERS, CAN EVER GET TOO SERIOUS. THE MORE SERIOUS, THE BETTER. THEY CHALLENGE US TO GET BETTER. I DEPEND ON THEM.

And they lived happily ever after.

HOG HEAVEN

LOCALLY GROWN

A SCOOP OF ITALY

'TIS THE Seasoning

Using terra-cotta pots and small urban plots, local chefs find creative ways to cultivate their own herbs and bring just-picked freshness to signature dishes

BY BETH FORREST

Growing up on farms in rural Indiana, Kentucky, and Ohio, Robert Fathman often got his hands dirty—driving a John Deere tractor, milking goats and working in the garden. As the chef of Azure in Copley Square's Lenox Hotel, Fathman continues to get his hands dirty tending his herb garden on the hotel's roof. Azure's American cuisine menu changes frequently to incorporate the verdant herbs, which can be found in savory dishes, extravagant desserts and even La Noche Loca, a tequila-based cocktail infused with tropical fruits, mint, Thai basil and lemon basil, and topped with champagne. Although his rooftop oasis might seem incongruous against the Boston skyline, Fathman isn't the only area chef tilling the soil. He joins a growing number of local chefs that have found space—in outdoor plots, as well as on roofs, decks and patios—to grow herbs as a way to save money, obtain the freshest products possible and get closer to the source of their ingredients.

Strawberry Basil Shortcake

Alice Feldman, Azure pastry chef

Shortcake

- 8 ounces (2 sticks) butter, soft
- 2 cups sugar
- 6 eggs, room temp.
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- ¼ cup lemon zest (about 4 lemons)
- ¼ cup lemon juice
- ¼ cup sour cream
- 2 cups cake flour, sifted
- ½ cup yellow cornmeal
- 1½ teaspoons baking powder
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 10 large basil leaves, thinly sliced

1. Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Butter and flour a loaf pan.
2. Sift the dry ingredients together and set aside. Combine sour cream and lemon juice in a separate bowl and set aside.
3. Cream butter and sugar together until light and fluffy, about 2 minutes.
4. Add eggs to the butter and sugar one at a time, beating well after each.
5. Add the lemon zest and vanilla extract.
6. Add half the dry mixture, and mix just to combine. Then add the sour cream mixture, and then the remaining dry ingredients. Fold the basil leaves into the mixture by hand.
7. Spoon into the prepared loaf pan and bake about 45 minutes, or until a skewer inserted in the middle of the cake comes out clean.

Strawberry-Rhubarb Compote

- 2 cups strawberries, trimmed and quartered
- 2 cups rhubarb, cut into ½-inch pieces
- ½ cup sugar
- 1 vanilla bean, scraped
- ⅔ cup port

Combine in a saucepan and simmer over low heat until rhubarb is tender (but still holds shape) and liquid is reduced by about one third.

Whipped Creme Fraiche

- 1 cup creme fraiche
- ¼ cup sugar

Combine both ingredients in an electric mixer and whip to stiff peaks.

When the cake is cool, cut into slices. Place each slice on a plate and top with strawberry-rhubarb mixture, then with whipped creme fraiche.

Serves eight.

Peter Davis

Maple Thyme Glazed Salmon
Peter Davis, Henrietta's Table

Maple Glaze

2 tablespoons maple sugar
1 tablespoon fresh thyme leaves
1 tablespoon maple syrup

Mustard Vinaigrette

½ cup Pommerey mustard
2 tablespoons horseradish
3 tablespoons maple syrup
½ cup water

4 8-ounce salmon filets

Mix together ingredients for the maple glaze. Coat the salmon with the maple glaze and place in a preheated oven (350 degrees) for 12 to 15 minutes. Blend ingredients for mustard vinaigrette. Serve salmon topped with vinaigrette.

Serves four.

A CAMBRIDGE COURTYARD

Peter Davis, chef of Henrietta's Table, has been growing herbs in the courtyard of the Charles Hotel for the past seven years. They are planted in terra-cotta pots and in a large raised bed intermingled with flowers, and Davis and his kitchen brigade harvest the herbs daily. "The herbs are nice to look at and give off a good aroma for people sitting on the patio," he says, "and food that you pick yourself can't get any fresher."

For Davis, herbs should be an understated addition to a dish, and not overwhelm it. Among his favorites to grow and incorporate into his contemporary New England fare are ones with softer and lighter flavors, most notably tarragon and thyme. He also likes chervil, a subtle cross between parsley and anise, because it works well with all fish, or simply tossed in with organic salad greens and lightly dressed. On Henrietta's menu, a combination of curly and flat-leaf parsley, rosemary, thyme, tarragon, sage, chives and marjoram coats the Bell and Evans rotisserie chicken, which is the perfect vehicle for presenting the taste of fresh herbs. A number of herbs also make their way onto the dessert list, in a cooling strawberry-tarragon sorbet, for example, and a fresh-fruit salad dressed with rosemary-infused orange juice.

With the large volume of business at Henrietta's Table, however, Davis can grow only a small percentage of the herbs he needs. To supplement his harvest, he actively supports local organic farms, such as Eva's Garden in South Dartmouth, whose sorrel, green onions and garlic are often the featured produce on the changing lunch menu. The Farm School, in Athol, which gives inner-city youths the opportunity to work on a farm and learn about sustainable agriculture, also supplies Henrietta's with fresh herbs.

In addition to tasting herbs in the restaurant, you can also pick up potted herbs in Henrietta's Market, located in the restaurant's foyer. These organic plants, sold in small terra-cotta containers, fit easily on balconies or in window boxes and are an excellent alternative to buying the expensive and perhaps not-so-fresh bunches at the supermarket (and the herbs will last a lot longer). These plants also get plenty of TLC before you bring them home, as Davis brings them out on the patio on sunny days, "so they can get a suntan."

Fresh Herb Salad with Mesclun Greens

Raymond Ost, Sandrine's

12 ounces fresh mesclun greens
1 bunch each tarragon (leaves only), chives and parsley
6 sprigs fresh mint
½ bunch dill
12 nasturtium flowers (for garnish)

Garlic Vinaigrette

1 cup vegetable oil
½ cup red wine vinegar
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
4 cloves garlic, chopped
1 bunch purple basil (keep 4 tops for garnish)
1-2 tablespoons water sea salt and pepper to taste

Blend all vinaigrette ingredients together. Mix herbs and greens together and toss with vinaigrette. Garnish with basil tops and nasturtium flowers.

Serves four.

TRANSPORTING FLAVORS

Growing up in the Alsace region of France, Raymond Ost, chef and co-owner of Sandrine's in Harvard Square, often helped his father and grandfather tend the family garden. Since then, wherever he lives, he finds a patch of ground to continue the tradition. One day, when business partner Gwen Trost visited his home, she was enchanted by the scent of fresh herbs and decided that she, too, wanted an herb garden.

So four years ago, Trost began to cultivate a large herb garden in Pomfret, Conn., with which to supply the restaurant. When she moved to Winchester two years ago, she took along the herbs. During the growing season, the garden now provides the restaurant with all its fresh herbs—it is so prolific, in fact, that she and Ost often share the extras with the chefs at nearby UpStairs on the Square.

Trost spends 10 to 15 hours a week in the garden, with Ost helping whenever he finds time. A veritable cornucopia, it includes standards like thyme, chives, parsley, "every kind of mint you can think of," jokes Ost, as well as more obscure herbs like salad burnet (the leaves taste like cucumber), lovage and Vietnamese coriander. In fact, some of the plants leave Ost in a quandary. When a Japanese friend of Trost's moved away, she donated her shiso plant (also called perilla) to the herb garden, and its clippings found their way into the restaurant. Ost was baffled by the herb, until one night when Trost's friend happened to stop by Sandrine's for dinner. "I accosted her at the table and asked how it should be used," says Ost. "She replied, 'Like basil,' and now I incorporate it in a sauce for fish."

Ost's favorite herb, however, is tarragon, because of its "nice, distinctive flavor." It is also representative of Alsatian cooking, but, he warns, you need "just a hint" in your sauce. In addition to main courses, fresh herbs play a large role in the rest of the menu. From the salads, into which they also toss rose petals, nasturtiums and violets that they grow in the garden, to the dessert list, which sometimes includes lavender ice cream and plum tarte Tatin with rosemary crust, Sandrine's finds a way to use all of the edible goodness from the garden. A self-confessed frugal chef, Ost even finds use for the stems in "chef's iced tea," which is made from stalks of mint, basil and verbena boiled with a vanilla bean for two minutes, steeped for 30 minutes, strained, and served chilled over ice with lemon.

Chilled Melon Soup with Anise Hyssop

Frank McClelland, L'Espalier

- 2 ripe cantaloupes
- 2 cups champagne
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- 1 ounce Anise hyssop leaves, for garnish
- 1 teaspoon salt

Peel and remove the seeds from one of the cantaloupes. Cut into one-inch chunks and place in a blender with the champagne and sugar. Blend for one minute. Strain; chill for 30 minutes.

Cut the second cantaloupe in half and remove the seeds. Use a spoon to shave out the meat of the melon in thin ribbons, and place the ribbons in a chilled bowl. Refrigerate until ready to serve.

Ladle the blended chilled soup over the melon ribbons.

Wash anise hyssop leaves, cut into thin slices, and sprinkle on soup for garnish.

Serves six.

A BACK BAY BOUNTY

Amid air compressors, plastic deck chairs and a small outdoor grill, herb-filled boxes have lined the perimeter of the rooftop deck at L'Espalier for the past 15 years. "It's all about having the kitchen team be close to the origin of what they are working with, and a respect for the ingredient," explains chef/owner Frank McClelland. "Only 1 percent of the kitchen staff that comes through the restaurant knows about gardening," he says, and planting, watering and harvesting are an essential part of the training that each cook undergoes. The education extends to the front of the house, with the servers receiving instruction on how to identify each plant and describe its flavor.

"I like picking herbs the day you are going to use them because their oils transfer to dishes and the palate," says McClelland. Combining an acute sense of taste with a flair for flexibility in the kitchen, he constantly changes the composition of each dish to best display the herbs that are in abundance. And though he does not have a favorite, he does admit to enjoying the aromatic anise hyssop. With heart-shaped leaves, the flowering shrub exudes a licorice-and-touch-of-ginger flavor. Easy to grow, the plant is wonderful as an infusion in tea and an ingredient in both sweet and savory dishes.

The herb season in Boston lasts surprisingly long. Harvest begins in mid-May with chives, rosemary and lovage (the leaves look and taste like mild celery), peaks in July and August with basils, thymes and lavender, and often lasts through late November. McClelland, who has decades of experience, offers some helpful hints for the urban gardener. First, plant the herbs in deep boxes or pots (to accommodate their root systems). Give them as much sun as possible, and make sure to water the plants every day. The hardier perennial herbs, including rosemary and lemon verbena, can often survive the long winter season indoors with a humidifier and daily misting.

Once you cultivate your own herbs at home, "their uses are just endless," McClelland says. He recommends topping baked fish with thyme and chives—or, just as easy, crushing a blend of fresh herbs in grapeseed or olive oil and brushing the mixture over meats while grilling. Mint is underused, he says, and works well with sautéed peas and beans or in a marinade for lamb, not to mention all of the possible options for desserts. "It takes only a second to pick, wash and chop, and your dishes will have a multi-dimensional taste."

FROM THE GARDEN, TO THE TABLE, TO THE PLATE

When Ana Sortun opened Oleana in a charming location on Hampshire Street in Cambridge, the back patio provided the perfect space and opportunity to begin growing herbs. Although Sortun hadn't before delved into the world of horticulture, the two-tiered garden patch now supplies the kitchen with most of its herbs throughout the summer. A wonderful combination of scents, textures and colors, the herbs include sage, lovage, absinthe, lavender, chives and basil. "Growing it yourself is a huge savings," says Sortun. "For the home cook, it is better to go to a nursery and buy the herb plant than it is to buy a bunch in the supermarket."

Any dish that Sortun serves this summer will incorporate fresh herbs from the garden. Look for dishes with summer savory or za'atar. Both popular in Middle Eastern cooking, the first is a spicy member of the mint family, while the latter, sometimes called wild thyme, has an earthy flavor and is often paired with sumac and sesame seeds. Sortun also prefers to use multiple herbs in dishes, as, she says, "it is the combination that gives the dish a different flavor." Parsley, mint and dill act like the herbes de Provence for Turkish cuisine, and also accent a romaine salad with a fresh, zesty taste.

Another herb that Sortun grows is angelica, which she began harvesting in late May. The plant, whose name probably derives from its reputation as an antidote to poison, resembles a rhubarb plant, with long, thick stalks and a canopy of big leaves. Sortun describes the flavor as having an essence of licorice—herbal and sweet—and suggests that most people would know it best as the "green pieces" in fruitcake. Oleana's pastry chef, Maura Kilpatrick, will update its use this summer, when she pairs it with fresh peaches in a sorbet served alongside a peach and mascarpone tart, garnished with an angelica-leaf syrup and candied angelica.

In addition to infusing Sortun's dishes with flavor, the fresh herbs grown in the patio also serve to connect the al fresco diners with the source of the ingredients. Pretty and fragrant, blossoming chives, basil flowers, lavender and rosemary become bouquet centerpieces. Joined by strawberry plants, jasmine, chamomile, and a fig tree, the herb garden serves as a cosmopolitan Eden, reminding us that to eat good food, one's hands should get a little dirty. IB

Chopped Romaine and Cucumber Salad with Yogurt Dressing

Ana Sortun, Oleana

- ½ cup walnut halves
- 1 large head of romaine, blemished outer leaves removed
- 1 cup chopped, clean arugula leaves
- 1 English cucumber
- 1 tablespoon chopped flat parsley
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh dill
- 1 tablespoon chopped fresh mint
- ½ teaspoon Aleppo chilies
- salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

Yogurt Dressing

- 2 large cloves garlic, finely minced
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 tablespoon good white vinegar, like champagne or other French vinegar
- 1½ teaspoons sugar
- salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- ½ cup good plain yogurt (Brown Cow or Old Chatham sheep's milk)
- 5 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

In a small skillet on low heat, roast the walnuts carefully until they are lightly browned and you can smell them. Cool and set aside.

In a small mixing bowl, let garlic sit with lemon, vinegar and sugar for at least 10 minutes, until it softens. Meanwhile, wash and dry the romaine and arugula. (The greens should be very dry, or the dressing won't cling to them). Chop the romaine into fine shreds. Chop the arugula. Place both greens in a large salad bowl.

Peel the cucumber and cut in half lengthwise. Spoon out the seeds. Cut in half so there are four pieces and grate the cucumber against the large holes of a grater. Add to salad bowl with the chopped herbs and walnuts.

Finish the dressing by whisking the yogurt and olive oil into the garlic mixture. Season to taste with salt and freshly ground pepper. Add half the dressing and another sprinkle of salt. Toss and taste for seasoning. (If needed, spoon in more dressing.) Sprinkle with chilies and serve immediately.

Serves four.

In Memoriam

The Improper Bostonian mourns the loss of Michael A. Tye, president and CEO of United Liquors, who passed away on June 2 at the age of 49, after a bout with cancer. Michael was not only an energetic, entrepreneurial business leader, but a man deeply devoted to civic life and committed to helping the less fortunate. He tirelessly supported such causes as the Fenway Community Health Center and the Boston-to-New York AIDS Ride. He also helped to found Community Servings and worked with Sky Ranch, a Montana camp serving poor and troubled youth.

His entrepreneurial spirit and generous ways will be missed by all who knew him.

Contributions in Michael Tye's memory may be made to the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, Multiple Myeloma Research Fund, 44 Binney Street, Room M557, Boston MA 02115, or to the Ray Tye Medical Aid Foundation, PO Box 850376, Braintree MA 02185.

"Centrally located in historic Copley Square, this restaurant offers American Southwestern cuisine accented by open grill preparation of the finest meats, poultry and seafood. The full bar boasts one of the premier collection of tequila in the Northeast as well as award winning margaritas."

THE NEW ENGLAND BARBECUE SOCIETY TRANSFORMS BACKYARD GRILLERS INTO DIE-HARD PITMASTERS

It's a raw, rainy Saturday afternoon on the cusp of May, otherwise known as National Barbecue Month. A score of us, bundled up in coats and rain gear, huddle around a propane heater before a makeshift stage inside the "pavilion"—a sprawling open-air shed—on the wooded grounds of the Maynard Rod and Gun Club. Jed LaBonte, our instructor for this barbecue cooking class, prepares us for the work to be done before Sunday's mock cook-off: the trimming and rubbing, the hours of smoking, the basting, the saucing, the hurry-up-and-waiting. LaBonte, burly and baby-faced with a strawberry-blond goatee, has neither coat nor rain gear. In his sweatshirt and jeans, he doesn't seem to notice the rotten weather. Instead he seems lit up from within by enthusiasm for his subject, the art of barbecue. For New England Barbecue Society devotees like LaBonte, where there's smoke, there's fire—inside and out.

Sure, the New England Barbecue Society sounds like an anomaly on the order of, say, the Kansas Clambake Alliance. But in fact the 12-year-old organization boasting more than 200 members is rich in talent and experience as well as passion. Cook-offs are core events for NEBS members—forming two-to-four-person teams, they can compete against each other and against other teams in local, regional and national events.

Naturally, the society has attracted its share of chefs, including Lawrence Parks, most recently of Blu, and Andy Husbands of Tremont 647 and Rouge (whose team, the UFO Social Club, received a nationally recognized Team of the Year award last year from NEBS). But the group's roster also includes librarians and carpenters, paralegals and publicists, graphic designers and at least one model-railroad expert, and all bring their own perspectives and skills to bear. Collectively, they put the "society" in the New England Barbecue Society, forming a community that emphasizes mentorship, sportsmanship, and plain old friendship via the classes and field trips they sponsor, and provides networking opportunities within the larger barbecue community.

BY RUTH TOBIAS

This weekend in Maynard, for instance, the NEBS BBQ Cooking School has drawn a gaggle of techies and engineers whose enthusiasm for the sheer physicality of their new hobby (spending hours wielding knives and massaging ground spices into slabs of raw flesh) is matched by their appreciation of its technological side. Over a late dinner of pasta and roast pork, thankfully served in the warm, dry basement of the gun club, engineer Karim Gabriel—a NEBS newbie whom LaBonte dubs "hard-core" for his eagerness to pull an all-nighter over the smoker—links barbecue to his knack for problem-solving: "Some engineers like to tinker, and this is a form of tinkering. I brew my own beer too, and I don't even like beer; I just like the experiment." Meanwhile, software developer Rich Taft gushes over the gadgetry: "You get to have all these fun tools; I want one of everything now."

An expert in tools himself, carpenter Rich Decker prefers to focus on a more primitive thrill: "I think it's the pyromaniac factor, the joy of lighting something and burning it." LaBonte describes the appeal this way: "It's man versus the flame. It's 'Can you control the fire; can you tame the flame?' And in the end, you've battled the elements, you've battled the fire, you've battled the clock, and your reward is this great piece of food."

Top to bottom: The 2002 New England BBQ Championship in Windsor, Vt.; a judge tastes an entry; checking out the ribs at the Musketaquid event in May; a winner at the 2001 Pig 'n' Pepper event

No matter what, says Jim McGrath, "you gotta think about BBQ pits as boy-toys." McGrath, Andy King, Gerry Bouyea and Dave Frary—each one bearded, baseball-capped and flannel-shirted, with beer in hand—are here as LaBonte's seasoned volunteer assistants, withstanding the chill to act as team leaders for the novices, who will go head-to-head on Sunday, divided into teams with names like Baby Back to the Future and Raked over the Coals. With one exception, the group is indeed all guys. As generalizations go, then, McGrath's is a good one: "The BBQ pit is the paradisiacal place where male bonding meets machismo meets meat, meat, and more meat."

Which isn't to say there aren't hard-core pitmistresses among them. Indeed, the current president of NEBS is one such fair creature, and a librarian, no less. With her husband, Dave, Nancy Peterson started off several years ago as a "backyard hacker" to become the leader of a team called Petey's Crispy Critters. Her story, in fact, reveals the essence of NEBS as a coalition built not on chest beating but on genuine above-and-beyond hospitality. At their very first competition, the legendary but now-defunct Pig 'n' Pepper Festival in Carlisle, the Critters arrived "with nothing but our smoker. My kids were 4 and 10 at the time. It ended up pouring rain. A team of firemen, the Pyro Porkers, came over and asked us to join them in their heated tent—they had a huge tent, music playing—and made sure our kids were comfortable for the rest of the event. They were perfect strangers but just truly wonderful to us. And that was it."

Far more than any concern for culinary prowess, the theme of conviviality comes up again and again among the regulars, who represent a sort of sample population within NEBS: energetic 30- to 40-somethings, both coupled and uncoupled, with white- and blue-collar day jobs. The social element comes partly from the nature of the food itself. As LaBonte reasons, "When you have a 10-pound brisket, you're not going to cook it for yourself." But it's also a matter of sportsmanship, which is why cook-offs are such focal points for the barbecue community: Here are where novices receive tips and encouragement from old hands; where flasks are passed around between teams in the wee hours as their members take turns tending the smoker; where friendships blossom. The point, Lawrence Parks explains, is that "even though the spirit of competition is there, the spirit of camaraderie is there too."

Still, NEBS is committed to putting New England on the map for award-winning barbecue. It's affiliated with the Kansas City Barbecue Society, considered to be the authority on traditional wood- and charcoal-fueled cookery (gas is verboten). The most prestigious KCBS-sanctioned event is the Jack Daniel's World Championship Invitational, held every October in Lynchburg, Tenn.; to qualify, you have to win an official state championship or other major contest (one in which at least 50 teams compete). In our neck of the woods, the best known of these is the New England BBQ Championship in July, sponsored by the Harpoon Brewery on its premises in Windsor, Vt. This is the place for enthusiastic newcomers to cut their teeth—perhaps as participants in the NEBS mentoring program, whereby they can tag along with a competing team to see the drama unfold. As LaBonte, who leads his own team called Uncle Jed's Barbecue Team, says, "We use it as kind of our ideal model."

To that end, NEBS is a multitasking organization. It publishes a monthly newsletter, Burnt Ends. It sponsors off-season "road trips" to area BBQ meccas—from down-home standbys like the Linwood Grill to hot spots like Rouge—and posts restaurant reviews on its Web site (www.nebs.org). It offers KCBS-approved contest-judge certification classes—which veterans like Dave Frary recommend for novices not after, but before, they enroll in cooking classes. Learning to judge, he says, "calibrates your palate, so everyone is on the same wavelength." At such classes, you learn about the complicated nine-point scoring system that rates taste, tenderness and appearance, and the precise qualities that judges, as a rule, seek in granting a perfect score.

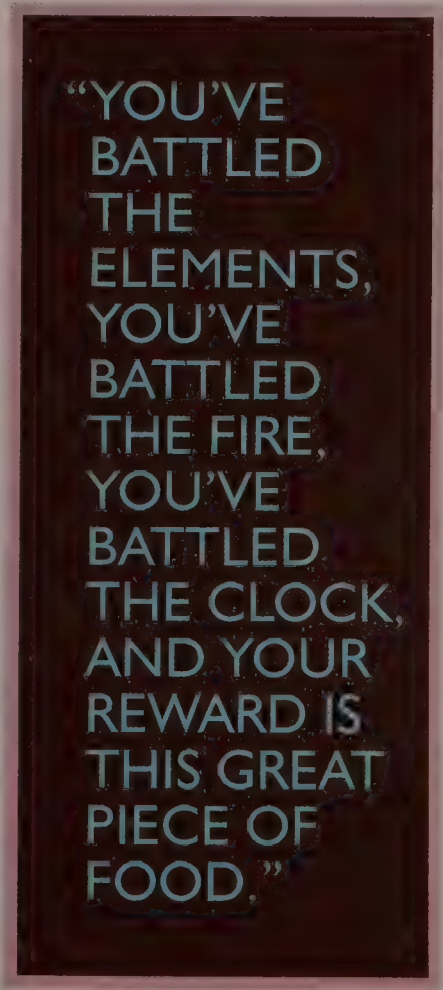
And then, at NEBS cooking classes such as this one, you learn that nothing you learn in any class compares with hands-on, real-world experience. It's a point LaBonte emphasizes again and again: "I can't tell you how to make barbecue," he warns during one of the night's many mini-lectures, this one on rubs. "I use the analogy of driving school. I can put you in the car, teach you what I know—but that first snowstorm when you have to hit the brakes, that's when you really learn how to drive."

Yet there he stands with his coffee grinder, strainer and funnel, discussing the advantages of using whole spices and kosher salt. And throughout the blustery night, as the lesser creatures among us (myself included) crawl into sleeping bags arranged on the floor of the club for a few hours' shut-eye, as the hard-cores baste briskets and butts, prepping the ribs and putting them on the smoker, LaBonte keeps talking, keeps teaching what he knows, on into the morning. Over a breakfast of scrambled eggs, sausage and gallons of coffee, for instance, he describes regional barbecue traditions: "In New England there's the clambake; in Hawaii it's the luau; in the Carolinas, barbecue is one thing—pulled pork. There they use vinegar-based sauces; Georgia uses a mustard-based sauce. In Memphis pork is king—ribs, pulled pork, etc. In Texas it's brisket and sausage." He continues on, long after most of the novices have headed back out to begin readying their chickens.

Outside, it's finally sunny and almost warm. The banter and bonding have long since begun in this corner. Andy King, known on the competition circuit as the team leader of the Bastey Boys, opens a beer and says, apropos of nothing, to no one in particular, "I'm a dyslexic agnostic insomniac. I stay up pondering the existence of dog." Everyone is getting a little punch-drunk, wielding meat thermometers as the minutes tick by and the "judges"—me and four regulars, including Nancy Peterson—assemble for the 11 o'-clock kickoff.

And as the first entries come in, these thus-far incredibly welcoming souls begin to frown and use the kind of jargon usually reserved for wines, referring to "tobacco" and "skunk" flavors (not ones to strive for) and perfect smoke rings—the pink borders that appear around a properly smoked slice of meat. There are chicken thighs, ribs, pulled pork, brisket medallions and burnt ends. All I'm thinking is "Yum."

By 1 pm, however, even I've had my fill, and we emerge for a final "bull session" at the pavilion. As LaBonte explains how a team can be named overall champ without placing first in a single category (Raked over the Coals comes in second consistently, thereby earning the highest score), I ask new NEBS member Chris Kennedy, an overgrown teddy bear and union labor mediator, whether he buys into this friendly-competition stuff. Instead of answering directly, he tells me about growing up in an industrial town where "you were either management or you were union. But every Friday there'd be either a fish fry or a barbecue, and everyone would come; even if you were on strike, everyone would get together. And I don't care if you hate each other; if you see some guy slathering sauce on ribs, you'll go over to him and say, 'Hey, you're doing that wrong,' and a conversation starts." Kennedy bought his smoker hoping to revive that tradition in his own work, "to get the two sides together."



Heck, if NEBS offers any indication, even world peace could be just a U.N. barbecue away. iB

Farmers' markets offer a cornucopia of nature's bounty right off the wagon

You don't have to till the field or travel to the fruited plain to reap the benefits of farm-fresh produce. From late May through Thanksgiving, growers from all over New England make the weekly trek to sell their blue-ribbon wares at some 20 markets in the Greater Boston area. Locations vary in size and flavor. Some marshal more than 20 vendors and some as few as five; some specialize in traditional fruits and vegetables, while others stock exotic fare. All have a loyal following that returns week after week for their fix of goodies, which run the gamut from perennial produce favorites like field tomatoes and sweet corn to turkey sausage, cut flowers and handmade soaps. And market vets swear that items purchased direct from the grower transcend supermarket stock. Produce couldn't be fresher if you picked it yourself, and the added shelf life means more bang for your buck. Below is a rundown on what you can find at four Boston-area farmers' markets.

BROOKLINE

Centre Street West Parking Lot
(behind the Coolidge Corner Theatre)
Thu., 11 am-dusk. June 19-Oct. 30.
617-566-8005

Specialty vendors are the calling card of this 20-year-old Brookline institution, stationed in a parking lot behind the Coolidge Corner Theatre. The much coveted corn and tomatoes are hands-down best-sellers, but less traditional highlights include Massachusetts-grown beef from River Rock Farm in Brimfield; gouda and cheddar cheese from Smith's Country Cheese in Winchendon; turkey pot pie, turkey sausage, turkey salad and turkey soup from Bob's Turkey Farm in Lancaster and hand-packed ginger and coconut ice cream from the Creamery in Marlboro. You'll also find exotic produce like bok choy and pea tendrils. Market-goers can choose from 30 different types of apples at the height of the season courtesy of Westport's Noquochoke Orchards, and kosher jams and jellies from Marlboro's Echoes of Summer are a hit with Brookline's large Jewish population. The market draws more than 2,500 visitors per day in July, and longtime market manager Arlene Flowers takes pride in the fact that "people can put a whole meal on the table by coming to our market."

BOSTON

City Hall Plaza
Mon. and Wed., 11am-6 pm. Through Nov. 26.
781-893-8222

Expect to feel downtown's hustle and bustle while browsing approximately 12 stalls. The City Hall farmers' market is a favorite among the lunchtime crowd. The price structure, geared toward individual servings, is great for grabbing a quick bite. Fresh chocolate milk from Hi-Rise Bread Company and apple cider, tea breads and cider donuts from Hamilton Orchards in New Salem are favorites for folks on the go, as are the focaccias and other baked goods from Cambridge's Iggy's and Roslindale's Big Dipper Bakery. Other seasonal delights include Freitas Farms' decorated pumpkins and gourds and its fresh cranberries harvested from Middleboro bogs in the fall.

BOSTON

Copley Square (St. James Avenue)
Tue. and Fri., 11 am-6 pm. Through Nov. 25.
781-893-8222

Bigger doesn't always mean better. The Copley Square farmers' market is limited to 11 vendors due to space constraints, but the participating growers are a well-stocked crew. Jeff Cole, executive director of the Federation of Massachusetts Farmers' Markets says, "There's not much that can be grown in Mass. that's not represented at Copley." New this season is an olive farmer who imports the Mediterranean fruit from his orchards in Lebanon and processes olive oil in Sudbury. Auburndale's Breadsong Bakery and Cambridge's Iggy's offer country-grade breads, and the organic growers of Athol's Farm School Apprentice program sell whole fruits and vegetables to rival those at Bread & Circus. On the nonedible side, Newburyport's Plum Island Soap Co. sells handmade facial rubs, body scrubs, cucumber spray, and spritzers that look and smell good enough to eat.

SOMERVILLE

Davis Square (Day and Herbert Streets)
Wed., 12-6 pm. Through Nov. 26.
781-893-8222

"Somerville has soul." Those are the words Breadsong Bakery owner Martha Sweet uses to describe the zeitgeist that sets the Davis Square market apart from the rest. For regulars, it's about more than food; there's a sense of community among the 11 or 12 weekly vendors and the customers. Jamaica native Farmer Al has developed a cult following for his calaloo (a leafy green reminiscent of collard greens), which sells out daily. Vermont's Fertile Crescent Farm specializes in potted plants, nosegays and cut and dried flowers. Bolton's Nicewicz Family Farm hauls in drool-worthy white peaches. Sterling's Crystal Brook Farm offers eight types of fresh cheese, including mozzarella and chèvre. Even man's best friend doesn't go unnoticed—Medford's Prancing Pooch makes organic dog biscuits. If your timing is right, you might catch an impromptu performance by bluegrass outfit Quarter Moon or the Somerville High School Orchestra. iB

A SCOOP OF italy

While Americans are screaming for ice cream, the Italians know that gelato is where it's at

BY JULIE SHORT

Anyone who's ever tromped through the streets of Rome in midsummer knows the thrill of rounding a corner and stumbling upon a neighborhood gelateria. For the weary, overheated traveler, the re-energizing effect of a dish of gelato is the stuff that inspires poetry ("O for a spoonful of creamy gelato…On this stifling summer eve, it makes me feel kind of mellow…").

In Italian, "gelato" means, simply, ice cream. But to gelato lovers like myself, that translation is far too simple—it's softer, creamier, richer and more flavorful than traditional American ice cream. While living in Italy for several months, I became a gelato devotee. Since then, I've always believed it's nearly impossible to find gelato in the United States that tastes as good as it does in Italy. Perhaps it's the classic setting—nothing compares with sitting in the Piazza della Rotonda and savoring a dish of creamy perfection—or maybe it's the European ingredients.

When a friend tells me about Giordano's Bottega Italiana, a Belmont sandwich shop that recently began serving "incredibly authentic" gelato, I feel hopeful. I learn that the proprietor, Angelo Firenze, imported all the machinery, a display case and most of his ingredients from Italy—a good sign.

So, one Saturday afternoon, I drive out to Giordano's with an empty stomach, eager for a taste. A display case with 24 different flavors lures me in. As I stand before it, Firenze, an Italian-American who spent several years working in Milan, shares his knowledge about the frozen confection of my dreams.

Firenze explains that ice cream differs from its Italian cousin in two ways: First, ice cream is churned more rapidly than gelato, allowing more air to be whipped into the mixture. The volume of a batch of ice cream increases by about 80 to 100 percent during the churning process; gelato, on the other hand, has a volume increase of only 30 percent, making it much more dense than regular ice cream. Second, there's more milk and less cream in gelato—a fact that surprises me, considering that gelato tastes so much richer than ice cream. Firenze's gelato is only about 6 percent fat (typically, gelato ranges between 7 and 10 percent); ice cream, on the other hand, is never less than 10 percent, and premium brands range from 14 percent to 18 percent, he says. "Gelato tastes better because there's less fat to obscure the true flavor," he adds. And apparently, the rumor that gelato recipes call for raw eggs isn't true...anymore, that is. Egg yolks have been replaced by guar gum, a thickening agent—even in Italy, Firenze says.

I feel like dancing in the aisles. Can it be true? Gelato is incredibly delicious and lower in fat than a pint of Chunky Monkey. "Due to its higher density, it has to be made with less fat—otherwise it would be a rock at typical freezer temperatures," says Firenze. Gelato is chilled at zero degrees Fahrenheit—25 degrees higher than ice cream—to keep the consistency soft.

Giordano's sells milk-based gelati, like the caramel or English toffee, as well as water-based sorbets like banana, raspberry and strawberry. Firenze prides himself on offering traditional Italian gelato flavors like nocciola (hazelnut) and stracciatella (a milk base with nuggets of dark chocolate), but the locals seem to prefer the most American of flavors: cookies and cream. Nevertheless, the tub of nocciola is half empty on the day that I visit, and Firenze says visitors seem willing to experiment. "People who come in have either had gelato before and are so excited when they see the display case—or they've never seen it before and ask me if it's frosting," says Firenze. "I tell them it's Italian-style ice cream. 'Like Italian ice?' the novices ask. I say no and hand them a spoonful. One taste, and they're sold." Firenze makes one batch at a time using imported ingredients and his own recipe (which he won't divulge). "Everyone in Italy uses these same bases, so it's as authentic as you'd find in Italy," he says.

I opt for the nocciola. Firenze serves it the Italian way, in a colorful cup with a tiny spoon. I take my first small taste. It's a flavor explosion: A strong, initial burst of puréed hazelnut is mellowed by the creamy base that fills my mouth and coats my tongue. It's smooth and cool, but not unpleasantly mouth-numbing like ice cream can be. It slides down my throat, and I'm transported back to Rome. I've found paradise. iB

Athan's in Brookline offers traditional Italian gelato flavors.

THE DISH ON GELATO

No, you don't have to travel all the way to Italy, or even Belmont, to find gelato. Obviously, the North End has a few purveyors, but make sure you know what you're getting. It may look authentic, but your first question should be: Is it made on the premises? Truth be told, most places don't make their own—and frequently, they buy from the same distributor in New Jersey. While this gelato is quite tasty, it's not quite authentic since it's made in large batches, like American-style ice cream. It's basically what Angelo Firenze calls "low-overrun ice cream," meaning regular ice cream with a bit less air churned into it than usual.

25 KINGSTON STREET BOSTON

Pink-and-gold two-piece by Roberto Cavalli, $137, at Neiman Marcus.

Sizzle

Those of you who enjoyed our first round of stylish swimsuits this spring will certainly appreciate our second installment: shimmery and sexy antidotes to summer's heat. This year, animal prints are "running rampant" in the urban jungle. Prints in vibrant blues and reds are electric against darker complexions, while softer pastels bring a glow to fairer skin tones. When evaluating cuts, choose comfort first. Among the styles you'll find are bandeau tops, triangle tops and itty-bitty bikini bottoms. Also, look for swimwear that laces up in every direction—up the back, the side and the front. But the most provocative style is the cutout one-piece. This bathing suit has strategic "holes" that reveal glimpses of sun-kissed (or self-tanned) skin. Pick something with a low open back if you don't feel comfortable baring half your belly. With great suits like these, how can summer fail to be fun?—S.H.

A FILLING READ

Appetites*, by the late Caroline Knapp, who lived in Cambridge and wrote Drinking: A Love Story, explores issues of hunger and satiety in women's lives.

Of the lush sensuality in a painting by Renoir, Caroline Knapp writes, "Food is love on this landscape, and love is sex, and sex is connection, and connection is food." This voluptuous image stands in stark contrast to Knapp's physical self—weighing only 83 pounds at age 24, she lived in a stoical prison of self-starvation. In Appetites, Knapp quests to unearth the complex factors behind this puzzling torment that afflicts so many girls and women, and she ranges from the political (women often learn to declaim loathingly, "I hate my stomach, I hate my thighs") to a lyrical disquisition on the sorrow, hidden "like footprints covered by new snow" that underlies the bizarrely painful acting-out called anorexia. The words "hunger" and "appetite" speckle the book, referring not only to hamburger-hunger, but to sexual desire (Knapp notes the "cool metallic asexuality" that anorexia gave her) and to ambition, which she believes is often thwarted by the disorder. Knapp gracefully and sympathetically reveals her tortured, slowly healing self, and she also laces in other women's stories, exploring their equally irrational self-punishing behavior. Although Knapp died of cancer shortly after completing Appetites, the book ends on a fulfilled note: The author's sister gives birth to a baby throbbing with newborn perfection: hungry in the best sense.

COMFORT IN THE SKY

Peek-A-Boo Cove is an imaginary land for children in the sky. Stuffed characters, a CD and a video tell the story of Cloudkin and friends. Peek-A-Boo Cove toys are appropriate for medical and therapeutic settings and for play. Three of the animals cost $25. Available at Brigham's in Belmont (617-484-9882).

Cynthia Vergados and Jackie Garabedian have created a skybound world called Peek-A-Boo Cove, populated by some winsome characters that are featured on a CD and video, and in plush, stuffed, doll form. The world up there is an especially comforting and nurturing one. And although the stories and the characters are fun for any young children, they're particularly suitable for children who have cancer, psychiatric problems or other maladies where the coziness and protection of a safe arms-around-the-heart world is imperative. Inspired by shapes from the windy, starry world of their home in the sky, the creatures include Cloudkin—whose stuffed version is depicted as asleep on one side, awake on the other—the cheerfully yellow Wimbies and Giggly Pig. Softly dense, they're just the right size for hugging by kids undergoing difficult treatments, and even by grownups (one woman who'd just had a mastectomy found them a comfortable squeeze). The accompanying songs describe a world that's gentle as a cloud, peaceful, friendly and blessedly carefree.

DOVETAILING NICELY

Furniture by Dovetail sells high quality hand-crafted wooden furniture. At 216 Clarendon Street, Boston 617-236-1067 or go to www.furniturebydovetail.com.

Stepping into Dovetail, you can almost feel the purity and high quality wafting off the furniture. These painstakingly handcrafted pieces tend toward a Shaker or arts-and-crafts flavor with their clean lines and honest, solid slats. In one incarnation, the slats tend to be more thickly substantial, bent outward prettily, often rather rosy in color. The good woods featured here include cherry, maple (one variety is a nearly white bird's-eye maple), walnut and some rosewood. Chairs may have a big brother of a sofa in the same style. Look inside and under, say, the bachelor's chest, with its bird's-eye drawer fronts, or the bar stool that flips up to become a stepstool. Inspect the corner of the sleigh chair; the refinement of the dovetailing pieces declares the beauty of the workmanship. Drop-leaf tables are ingeniously made to consume minimal space when not in use. As elegant as the furniture is to behold, it is equally so to use; you sit with grandeur and solidity. It's no surprise that some universities have hired Dovetail to decorate the offices of august professors.

ENCHANTING HIDEAWAY

Tucked away in the Back Bay, Casa Romero has been offering tasty south-of-the-border cuisine and warm, gracious service for 30 years

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

The Back Bay boasts a large and diverse assortment of restaurants. They range from trendy and not so trendy watering holes to homegrown and national chain steakhouses, and from modest ethnic eateries to European style hotel restaurants with Michelin star aspirations and prices to match.

Among this crowded field is Casa Romero, an enchanting hideaway that has been dispensing hospitality for over 30 years in a tiny alley off Gloucester Street between Newbury and Commonwealth. I stumbled upon this jewel as I was retreating from the posted menu at one of the city's most expensive restaurants a few paces away. I was immediately drawn, as if by a gourmandic equivalent of magnetic flux, through Casa Romero's massive iron-studded, coffered wooden door.

Eye-catching blue and white Iberian tiles appoint the entrance foyer. Two or three steps down, one enters a series of small dining rooms decorated with an eclectic array of paintings, embroidered wall hangings, and sculptures. Exposed brick walls of varying reddish hues, and floors of wide pine board give the place a winsome patina. The inlaid centers of its wooden tables replicate the foyer tiles. Mexican handicrafts and tchotchkes occupy niches and recesses around the room.

Decent salsa, in which the tomato was fresh tasting and well balanced between sweet and tart, and the garlic and cilantro prominent but not overpowering, accompanied a basket of corn chips, which themselves fell somewhere between commercial and homemade in quality and character. Casa Romero's menu offers relatively standard American-Mexican fare—cuisine that is generally pleasing to American palates. An excellent chicken tortilla soup ($4), the sopa del dia one evening, profited from a foundation of full-flavored chicken stock, to which had been added chopped celery, carrots, parsley and, most importantly, shards of corn tortilla. This humble yet delicious dish transported me back to Mexico, where the same preparation is called simply "tortilla soup," a name that accords its dominant ingredient the status it deserves.

Mole, a deep, dark sauce that combines several types of chili peppers with the improbable ingredient chocolate, originated in the Mexican city of Puebla. Casa Romero offers three different chicken preparations with mole: marinated chicken wings, chicken enchiladas and boneless breast of chicken. I ordered the wings, an appetizer. While the wings were unexceptional in themselves, the sauce made them interesting. But they might have been even better had not a liberal sprinkling of sesame seeds over the top overwhelmed the subtle nuances of the sauce.

Ceviche is marinated in citrus juice and served with olive oil, spices and a fresh sprig of cilantro.

A pork tamale ($8) captured first prize among the appetizer selections. Served on a banana leaf, this combination of shredded pork and ground corn in a chipotle (smoked jalapeño pepper) and tomato sauce demonstrated why corn is king in Mexican and much of Latin American cuisine. The sweetness of the corn balanced the kick of the sauce, and both enhanced the flavor of the pork. Another traditional appetizer, chili relleno ($10), was a lightly fried pepper stuffed with mellow cheese, bathed in the same piquant sauce as the tamale.

Of the five appetizers we sampled over two visits, only the grilled shrimp with garlic and lemon ($9) disappointed. Rather than the crunchy shrimp quickly sautéed in hot oil that I had been expecting, these shrimp were drowned in a tomato-based sauce that masked their flavor. More seriously, they had apparently been simmered in that sauce, reducing their texture to somewhere between mealy and rubbery.

Of three main courses ordered, the best was the beef tenderloin fajitas ($18), tender strips of beef with a lively combination of peppers and onions. When you order rare beef in Mexican restaurants, you sometimes get tough and sinewy meat. Casa Romero avoided this outcome by starting with a good cut of beef and grilling it quickly over a sufficiently hot flame. A special one evening, sautéed sea scallops, arrived in the ubiquitous tomato sauce, but unlike the shrimp, the scallops had been handled more skillfully, and their tender yet resilient texture and sweet, nutty flavor survived. Finally, the Tampiquena (Tampico is a Mexican city) plate ($22) featured a strip sirloin steak and an enchilada verde accompanied by plendid frijoles (refried beans), rice studded with chopped pepper and tomato, and a refreshing lime-accented guacamole. While the steak was not thick, it was well seared to seal in the juices and, like the tenderloin, it arrived rare as ordered.

Casa Romero's desserts included flan ($4), described on the menu as "brandied caramel custard." While the brandy escaped our notice, this standard dessert—flan or crème caramel is as compulsory on French bistro and Mexican menus as crème brûlée seems to be in Boston—proved soothing and satisfying. More unusual was the pay de coco ($4.50), light cheesecake made with ricotta cheese and coconut and served with a superb apricot sauce that provided a tart counterpoint to the sweet ricotta and coconut.

Casa Romero's short wine list offered 10 reds, seven whites and four sparklers. That over half of them were priced below $30, including a very credible cabernet sauvignon for only $22, made the list a winner from a price/quality point of view. The cab, Casillero del Diablo from Chile's Central Valley, was a fruity, well-structured wine that stood up well to the tomato-based sauces. In value, it was without peer in my recent dining experiences.

Perhaps the best thing about Casa Romero was the quality of the service. Charming, congenial waiters demonstrated confident, unpretentious knowledge of the menu and unfailing attentiveness and responsiveness—the latter in spite of the difficult geography of multiple dining rooms and obstructed sight lines. They replaced tableware with a frequency that belied the restaurant's customer-friendly prices and relaxed atmosphere, and they patiently fielded questions and multiple requests for doggie bags to export the remainders of Casa Romero's generous portions. On one evening, I learned our waiter hailed from Cancun, and his engaging manner and easy smile prompted me to move that destination up several notches in future travel plans.

The phrase "hospitality industry," when applied to many restaurants, often smacks of irony. My visits to Casa Romero provided a welcome respite from that syndrome. Its pleasant ambiance, which stemmed in great measure from the warmth and grace of its staff, made even its ordinary dishes taste better and its better dishes first-rate. IB

Conquering space...Jingo Bells ice cream....Suburban spice

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Cambridge is a quirky place, and the basement area of the building that formerly housed Butterfish, Cafe Celador and the Peacock is a quirky site for a restaurant. Too far from Harvard Square to attract much foot traffic, and too close to the square to provide more than three legit parking spots, it's a "precarious little space," chef/owner Tony Maws acknowledges. Yet when he decided to open his own restaurant, Maws focused less on the limitations of the space and more on the clientele he expected to attract: "Well-traveled, well-fed, well-cultured" was his assessment of the neighborhood denizens.

Less than a year after opening Craigie Street Bistrot, it's clear that Maws' thoughtful strategy—in addition to his kitchen skills, of course—has paid off.

"Nobody has had food or France issues," he observes. The cosmopolitan crowd, representing a cross section of the local demographic—judges, physicians, tweedy academics and black-clad couples discussing "moral absolutism"—has no qualms about ordering the red-chili-rubbed hangar steak with its accompanying marrow bone just days after the Canada mad-cow scare. Only one table of diners has taken offense to the all-French wine list, drinking water in protest, to the mild amusement of staff.

Strikingly redone in French flea market chic, the room emanates a cozy charm. If there were a word for "feng shui" in French, the Bistrot would be a stellar example. The scuffed wooden table that serves as a bar/waiting area offers reading material ranging from a French dictionary (so you'll know that the petite epeautre with the pork is spelt) to an obsessively exhaustive guide to cheeses (so you'll know that the Swiss invented processed cheese, and that Cachaille, a variety of fromage fort, will keep for up to 20 years if periodically topped off with new cheese).

After nearly a year without time off, Maws plans to close the restaurant for the first two weeks in July to take a vacation in France. Let's hope he returns well-rested; he's likely to face a very long and successful run behind the stove at Craigie Street.

Craigie Street Bistrot's chef/owner Tony Maws brings a slice of France to Cambridge.

SECOND COURSE

A few blocks away, at Chez Henri, chef/owner Paul O'Connell has hired a new pastry chef. Tania Schnapp, formerly of Rouge in the South End, leads a double life as a photographer, with a business called Schnappshots....Great Bay has opened quietly in the new Hotel Commonwealth in Kenmore Square....The opening of Masala Spice in Needham Center is still in the works. The newest venture from Vinod and Shikha Kapoor, who started with Bombay Club and Kebab 'n' Kurry, then expanded into the suburbs with Curry Leaf in Natick, promises innovative decor—custom stained glass, fiber-optic light radiating through cobalt-blue tile, a fancy cocktail bar honoring the elephant-headed Hindu deity Ganesh—but more intriguing is the "educational" spice bar. Behind the curved copper bar, a specially trained chef will roast, grind and custom-blend imported spices while describing the origins and flavors of each spice. After dinner, guests will take home their own spice bottle. Could this lead to a "name that spice" competition?

Finally: For French-bashing at its most ridiculous, consider the Star Spangled Ice Cream Company. One of its featured flavors is "I Hate the French Vanilla." According to its Web site (www.starspangledicecream.com), the company was founded as "a conservative alternative to Ben & Jerry's." The best part is the site's "mail bag," which includes kudos from fans ("As a mom of two soldiers in Iraq, I thank you...") and feedback from ice-cream-eating liberals who suggest adding such flavors as "Cherry Falwell" and "Green Peacetachio." The last word goes to the astute observer who notes: "Just what America needs—fatter conservatives." iB

Performing Arts: Live from New York

What more need we say about a show that's won the most Tony Awards in Broadway history (12)? And the most Drama Desk Awards (11)? And eight Outer Critic Circle Awards? And both the 2001 New York Drama Critics' Circle Award and the 2001 Drama League Award for Best Musical? And the Astaire Award for Best Choreography? The Producers, a hysterical musical directed and choreographed by Susan Stroman (Crazy for You, Contact, The Music Man and Oklahoma), was hailed as "a blissful spectacle that will leave you delirious" by the New York Times. It's based on Mel Brooks' Academy Award–winning 1968 film about a down-on-his-luck theatrical producer and his accountant who hatch the ultimate scam: Raise more money than they need for a surefire Broadway flop and pocket the difference. The Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-426-9366). Tue.-Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun. 2 and 7:30 pm. June 17-Sept. 13. $87-$97.

Music: A Bevy of Blues

This year's Boston Globe Jazz and Blues Festival brings in some of the biggest names in jazz, jazz/rock, blues, Latin jazz and R&B for an array of mostly free concerts: jazz wizard Herbie Hancock; the Queen of Soul, Aretha Franklin; jazz chanteuse Jane Monheit; trumpeter Roy Hargrove; Cuban jazzman Arturo Sandoval; saxophonist Joe Lovano; and jazz/rockers Medeski, Martin & Wood, to name a few. It all starts June 15 with a multi-stage extravaganza at Faneuil Hall from 12-6 pm. (You can also get your face painted or get a temporary tattoo). On June 16 the fest moves to the FleetBoston Pavilion with a show by blues master Buddy Guy and Los Lobos at 7:30 pm ($30). June 17 features a free outdoor concert at Copley Square and then an evening show at the Pavilion with Aretha Franklin ($40-$50). June 18 at the Pavilion showcases Medeski, Martin & Wood and the John Scofield Band ($30), and Roy Hargrove plays at Copley Square June 19. The free festival finale, at the Hatch Shell on June 22, features Arturo Sandoval and his Latin band and Herbie Hancock. Visit www.ticketmaster.com for tickets to Pavilion shows.

MONDAYS IN JUNE

Tastings: Sangria on the Sea

Once in a blue moon, your friendly Calendar Girls make a tiny error, and you better believe we hear about it—tenfold. Case in point: Last issue, we listed the wrong phone number for Tasca Restaurant's sunset harbor cruise. Apparently, this event piqued the interest of more than a few readers, judging by the phone calls we received. Intrigued, we looked into the event to find out what the excitement was all about. And yes, it really is a cool shindig. For a mere $49, you get a sunset cruise plus an eight-course tapas dinner with a glass of sangria provided by Tasca. We'll drink to that. World Trade Center, 200 Seaport Blvd., Boston (617-730-8002, from 3-6 pm). Mondays in June. 7-10 pm. $49.

SAT./JUNE 14

Down by the River

There's no better setting for a festival in Greater Boston than along the banks of the Charles River. Perhaps that's what the Cambridge River Festival owes its 25 years of success to—that, or the amazing lineup of folk, jazz and world music; public art; poetry readings; crafts; dancing; storytelling and international cuisine. Whatever the reason, more than 100,000 people converge upon a mile-long stretch of riverbank every year to partake in the festivities. This year promises to be even more spectacular than last, with a choreographed boat ballet on the river, a display of vintage boats, a street parade and a boat procession down the river. Memorial Drive, between JFK St. and Western Ave., Cambridge (617-349-4380). 12-6 pm.

JUNE 12

CityScope: Ready to Ramble

The second Reggae Ramble affords one and all the chance to get together and feel all right. It's a music and food frenzy—all kinds of Jamaican food and music—with, strangely enough, a touch of exercise. Leading up to the reggae party is a 4.4-mile run (and a 2.6-mile walk for the less ambitious) along the Charles River, which will get you nice and hungry for the array of Caribbean specialties like jerk chicken, Jamaican beef patties, curried chicken and Caribbean salad. Harpoon beer and tropical fruit drinks will be available to help you cool down from dancing to the reggae tunes. It all starts and ends at the American Legion Marsh Post, and the exercise part is optional. 5 Greenough Boulevard–Eliot Bridge, Cambridge. 7 pm. $15. Go to www.clydesdale.org/BAEvents/reggaeramble/index.html to register online.

An artistic pig was one of the contestants on the first season of Animal Planet's Pet Star

Preview

Animal Idol

Let your pet challenge the nation's dancing dogs, crooning cockatoos and painting pigs on Pet Star

Do you think your cat, Mr. Whiskers, has what it takes to beat out the rest of America's pets in a $25,000 talent contest? Then you'd better help him hone his Sammy Davis Jr. impersonation for Pet Star's Boston auditions, June 15 at Dog Day Afternoons doggie day-care center in the South End.

The debut season of Animal Planet's talent show for pets was a success, and the producers are looking for more amusing animals to compete in the second season. Sure, not all the pets that make the show have a particularly impressive talent (Tater Tot, the "butt-surfing" dog who dragged his bum around the stage comes to mind), but they still seem to get high scores from the three judges, none of whom has a Simon Cowell-esque sadistic streak. However, the audition will actually include frank assessments of your pet's talent or lack thereof, so bring a few Milk Bones to boost Rover's ego if he's having an off day with his unicycle. If your furry, feathered or scaly friend makes the cut, you're off to Hollywood to take a shot at the grand prize—and meet the show's host, Mario Lopez, a.k.a. Mr. A.C. Slater from Saved by the Bell. And you know what a crush your ferret had on Slater.—Ezra Dyer

Capturing the Friedmans and Wattstax are documentary delights

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The 1973 documentary Wattstax features Jesse Jackson and Isaac Hayes appearing at a one-of-a-kind concert

This has been an incredible year for documentaries. Rivers and Tides, Strange Fruit, Amandla! and Spellbound are just some of the standout documentaries that have offered musical, historical, artistic and emotional highs.

Capturing the Friedmans is the best of the bunch. It's hard to think of another movie that plunges you into greater moral ambiguity than Andrew Jarecki's documentary about the Friedman family of well-to-do Great Neck, Long Island, who splintered apart in the late 1980s, when father Arnold and youngest son Jesse were accused of molesting Arnold's preteen computer students.

Arnold Friedman's legal troubles began when postal authorities intercepted child pornography addressed to him. When they searched his house and found more pornography, local authorities wondered whether Friedman might present a danger to the kids to whom he taught computer lessons. When investigators asked kids if their computer teacher had touched them inappropriately, many said yes. Many also said Jesse, the 18-year-old son who helped his dad with the classes, touched them, too.

It's easy to believe the Friedmans are guilty. In the recent interviews, and in the painfully intimate home videos shot in 1988 by David, another son who had just gotten a camcorder at the time, it seems that only wife/mom Elaine is shaken by the revelation that Arnold, who died in 1995, was a pedophile. The sons (there's also a third, Seth) seem so defensive that they are unable, or perhaps unwilling, to digest the revelation.

But there was plenty to be defensive about. Jarecki interviews former computer students—some of them say the Friedmans molested them and some say they did not. Intentionally or not, the interviews make the viewer wonder how much the police's power of suggestion influenced the kids' statements. The Friedman case happened not long after another similar incident, the McMartin case, in which kids' statements of molestation turned out to be false. It would be no surprise to learn that's what happened here, too.

Ultimately, it's impossible to totally believe the Friedmans' denials (Arnold and Jesse both ended up pleading guilty to avoid trials) or to totally believe they're the monsters police made them out to be. You have to believe the truth is somewhere in the middle. So is the movie a cautionary tale about evil lurking beneath an everyday suburban surface? Or is it a cautionary tale about the power of suggestion and abuse of power? It's both. At the Coolidge Corner Theatre starting June 13.

Wattstax has long been an elusive movie. Filmed mostly at an August 1972 all-day concert at the Los Angeles Coliseum and released in theaters in 1973, the documentary was never released on video. Now it's back for a 30th-anniversary re-release, and it's a one-of-a-kind movie.

Director Mel Stuart didn't just capture the many Stax Records acts performing at the concert. He also filmed residents of nearby Watts talking about their lives seven years after the famous riots in that neighborhood, and often talking about themes (adultery, the blues, etc.) of the songs we hear. Cut-in sequences of Richard Pryor monologues serve as a funny, rueful Greek chorus about black life in America.

Wattstax is above all a priceless time capsule. It captures the time when black fashion, unity and political optimism were arguably at their peak. Of course, realizing how little racial progress has been made since and how disco would supplant rhythm and blues in the mid-1970s adds a sad undercurrent to the movie. But to watch Jesse Jackson lead the crowd of 100,000 in a call-and-response chant of "I am somebody!", hear the Staples Singers sing "Respect Yourself" or see headliner Isaac Hayes take the stage as the actualization of the new black man is to feel Wattstax's power.

The film's one big disappointment is that the music often takes a backseat. Hayes (whose triumphant performance of "The Theme from Shaft," kept out of the original release by a legality, has been restored), the Staples and Rufus Thomas are highlights, as are Luther Ingram and Johnnie Taylor. But for most acts there's but one song, and for many only a snippet of a song. The Wattstax concert has often been called "the black Woodstock," but most of the film's revolution takes place offstage. At Copley Place starting June 6. IB

The feisty young woman caught between two cultures—think Double Happiness, Mississipp Masala and My Big Fat Greek Wedding—get trotted out yet again in director Gurinder Chadha' latest, which can't compare to her Bhaji on th Beach but is still involving. Parminder Nagra give a winning performance as Jess, the Indian-Englis teen with soccer skills and two Sikh parents wh won't allow her to pursue such a nontraditiona female endeavor. When Jess is recruited to play fo a local women's team, with the possibility o discovery by an American pro team, the scene set for lots of running around behind her parent back and comic mishaps—in fact, an awful lot repetitive running around and mishaps. It's a pretty predictable, but Nagra, Anupam Kher (a the heroine's father) and Keira Knightley (as he teammate and sometime rival), as well as Chadha' sense of compassion, help dignity fight caricatur to a standoff. (At Boston Common, Kendal Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Blue Car ★★
Newcomer Agnes Bruckner gives a stunning perfo mance as a confused high school senior, but write director Karen Moncrieff's movie is a standard-issu indie debut that never rises above the form's cliche the troubled teen, divorced parents, self-destructiv supporting characters who threaten to pull down th heroine, the sexual tension of 18-year-old Meg's re lationship with her supportive English teache (David Strathairn). Not bad, but not very specia either. (At Harvard Square.)

Bruce Almighty ★★
The Majestic was a terrible movie that deserved t flop, so it's painful to see Jim Carrey retreat bac into physical comedy with this painfully broa movie about a guy who's ticked off about his ac cursed, unlucky life until God (Morgan Freeman lets him take the world's reins for a week to see he can do any better. (It's not as if audiences re jected the idea of Carrey doing drama; they re jected a bad movie.) Despite a few amusing mo ments, Carrey's latest is as unconvincingl feel-good as The Majestic was. The premise is just clumsy excuse for his character to discover, a Jimmy Stewart in It's a Wonderful Life, that he di n't have it so bad after all. And don't the Holly wood studios have anything better for Jennife Aniston than the girlfriend role she's stuck wit here? (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Confidence ★★★
This tale of a team of con men can come off like hodgepodge of the crime stories of David Mame Jim Thompson and Elmore Leonard. But it has zippy pace, an amusing sense of gallows humor and colorful cast. Edward Burns, Paul Giamatti an Rachel Weisz head up the crew of con men; And Garcia, Luis Guzman and Donal Logue play th equally twisted lawmen; and Dustin Hoffman is th scuzzy crime kingpin who forces the crew to pull con of his choosing, after they mistakenly rip off briefcase of money from his accountant. Direct James Foley has a Thompson adaptation (Aft Dark, My Sweet) and a Mamet adaptation (Gle garry Glen Ross) in his past, so he knows how to kee this lean and mean. (At Boston Common, Fenwa Harvard Square and suburbs.)

A Decade Under the Influence ★★★
Produced by cable's Independent Film Channe this look at American moviemaking from the la 1960s through the late 1970s really should hav been a lengthier series. It tries to cram too muc into too little time, so it can be disappointing spots. That said, even an iffy documentary abo the making and the impact of such movies as Ea Rider, The Last Picture Show, *M*A*S*H*, Mea Streets and The Last Detail—from the brief e when Hollywood took a more hands-off approac to directors—has a lot going for it. The cl choices are sometimes odd, but hopefully th movie will guide a lot of people to a lot of unforge table movies. (At Kendall Square.)

Down with Love ★★★
First there was Gus Van Sant's refilming of th script for Hitchcock's Psycho. Then came Tod Haynes' Far from Heaven, a meticulous re-creatio of the 1950s melodramas of Douglas Sirk. No here's this self-conscious and fizzy pastiche decor, plots and characters from the Rock Huds and Doris Day movies of the early 1960s. Well, least this one has some genuine fun with its appr priating, as Renée Zellweger plays the author of bestseller telling women to stop being distracte by love and Ewan McGregor plays a womania reporter intent on exposing her by making her fall for him. It's complete with masquerades, split screens, his sexually ambiguous best friend (the role Tony Randall played in the originals), cheesy back projection, double entendres only slightly more nudge-nudge than Hudson and Day's, a second relationship featuring the leads' confidants—and Randall himself. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The In-Laws ★★

This pointless remake of the hilarious Alan Arkin–Peter Falk comedy steamrolls most of the comic finesse out of the story of two dads who couldn't be more different, but whose kids are about to marry. Douglas plays the Falk part, a spy who drags unwitting Brooks, a worry-prone doctor, into one of his assignments. But, by adding a prologue of spy intrigue, the movie takes all the fun out of wondering whether the man of action is really a spy or just delusional. And Douglas and Brooks don't have a quarter of the chemistry that Falk and Arkin had. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Italian Job ★★

Big car chases are no camouflage for shoddy writing in this underachieving remake of a 1969 heist movie. The characters are all amazingly vague in this story of a gang of thieves (including Mark Wahlberg, Charlize Theron and Mos Def) that plots revenge after one of them makes off with the spoils of a Venice robbery. The story awkwardly maneuvers itself into the situation of the British original when a cache of gold is heisted from an armored car by using a fleet of stripped-down, souped-up Mini-Coopers. But the cool Minis overshadow the people this time. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Matrix Reloaded ★★½

This spotty sequel to 1999's pop-culture touchstone holds true to the theory that the middle movie is usually the weakest of trilogies (that's assuming this fall's third movie is better). Where the first was intimate and tightly constructed, the new movie is less specific in its internal logic and has a large scale that is sometimes clumsy (including council meetings and war talk reminiscent of, yikes, The Phantom Menace). The sequel seems even more like a videogame than the first, in its increasingly elaborate, animation-dependent fight scenes (which come off as self-parody at times) and in the "leveled" structure (fight to see the Oracle, move up to fight to see the Keymaker, move up to fight your way into the Source, etc.). The heavies have all the fun this time, including Hugo Weaving's Agent Smith, who can now replicate himself at will, and the snippy Frenchman played by Lambert Wilson. Not bad, but not as satisfying as hoped. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

May ★★½

Writer-director Lucky McKee's blend of female alienation and gore—think The Virgin Suicides meets Carrie—makes for intriguing, though sometimes slow horror-drama. Angela Bettis, who actually played the title character in the 2002 TV remake of Carrie (filmed after this), plays the lonely and sympathetic young woman whose social troubles make her turn to violence. Jeremy Sisto is the guy that she gets a crush on before she proceeds to totally weird him out, while Anna Faris is her mischievous coworker. The blend is intriguing, though there's an awful lot of set-up to get through before the horror. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

A Mighty Wind ★★★½

In Christopher Guest's latest improvised mockumentary, following Waiting for Guffman and Best in Show, Eugene Levy and Catherine O'Hara dominate as a one-time folk duo and romantic couple that, like two other groups, reunites for a memorial concert. As the fallen folk idol who's had a rough three decades since, Levy is hilariously zonked out, but he and O'Hara sing so well together that their scenes are also disarmingly sweet and touching. Guest and his This Is Spinal Tap cohorts Michael McKean and Harry Shearer also score together as their "other" musical project, the Folksmen, though the three characters are underdeveloped as individuals. Meanwhile, like always, Fred Willard nearly steals the show. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Owning Mahowny ★★★

Director Richard Kwietnowski, who previously made Love and Death on Long Island (about a stuffy author's sudden infatuation with a heartthrob actor), takes us on another intriguing journey through the obsession raging within one man's mind. This time, it's a fastidious assistant bank manager (Philip Seymour Hoffman) with a gambling jones. He starts embezzling money from the bank, so he can gamble to pay off his debts—and then, because he loses more, he embezzles some more, and so on. His quiet desperation has a fascinating car-crash quality, and is all the more compelling because the movie is based on a true story. (At Kendall Square.)

Albert Brooks plays a dad who gets dragged on a wild ride by a spy (Michael Douglas) in The In-Laws.

Spellbound ★★★½

Jeffrey Blitz's documentary follows eight junior high schoolers with a magnificent obsession: they're all contestants in the 1999 National Spelling Bee. The movie takes them from their regionals through the Washington, D.C., finals, and it has quirky charm to spare. The kids make up an impressively broad cross section—boys and girls, city and country, white and of color—and the Bee really brings their families together, and lets these smart kids, often misfits back in their hometowns, bond with others like themselves. The finals also generate more dramatic tension than any other movie this year, by far. (At Coolidge Corner.)

X2: X-Men United ★★★

The first one did nothing for me, but the X-Men sequel is a looser and more entertaining experience than its stiff predecessor. Perhaps it's the plot about a government higher-up (Brian Cox) who's determined to start a war that gives the sequel an extra timeliness. Cox, Patrick Stewart and Ian McKellen all give sly performances, Hugh Jackman gets tough-guy laughs as the Eastwood-esque Wolverine, Halle Berry and Famke Janssen kick sci-fi butt, and Alan Cumming has joined the cast as a creepy little mutant. The plot is much more focused and under control than the first time around, and the only real problem here is that the climax drags on, and on. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Bad Plus transforms popular songs as part of its free-wheeling jazz journey

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

The Bad Plus is a self-described "power piano trio" that covers Nirvana's "Smells Like Teen Spirit." But if you based your expectations of the band on those facts alone, you'd fall far short of the acoustic jazz combo's true dynamic.

"If you come to the gig hoping to hear some Nirvana-style music, you'll be sorely disappointed," says pianist Ethan Iverson, whose group plays June 17 at Ryles Jazz Club and Aug. 10 at the JVC Jazz Festival in Newport, R.I. "We play Bad Plus–style music."

Not that Bad Plus–style music is easy to nail down. The band also covers new-wave hit-maker Blondie's "Heart of Glass" and electronic act Aphex Twin's "Flim" on its major-label debut, These Are the Vistas, and is known to tackle Black Sabbath's "Iron Man" and the Police's "Every Breath You Take" onstage. Yet 70 percent of the band's repertoire is made up of originals just as varied and invested with playful shifts and punctuation.

"Blondie's song is the most avant-garde piece on the record in certain ways," Iverson says of "Heart of Glass," whose melody swings in and out of free-jazz deconstruction. "We really believe in a lot of ear candy. If there's one thing that we try to bring to jazz, it's the fact that each piece is its own universe. It's not one idea for the night. It isn't pop music by any means, but it might have some of that. We take you on a little journey to different places.

"There's no sin in being a little entertaining once in a while," adds the pianist, citing the drama evident in videos of John Coltrane (known for his reinvention of the show tune "My Favorite Things") and Thelonious Monk. "Perhaps jazz today is a little less theatrical than it once was, but I would prefer to have some audience outreach, just like it used to have with the most classic of jazz ensembles.

"We are fortunate that while playing exactly the kind of music we want to play, we have gotten some mainstream exposure," says Iverson, whose band has garnered features in the New York Times and Esquire and will also appear at Long Island's Bonnaroo NE (with the Dead, Bob Dylan and Tom Petty) the same August weekend that they're playing at Newport. "And we're getting a chance to be seen by a lot of different types of people."

Far from the New York spotlight, the Wisconsin-bred Iverson first met up with bassist Reid Anderson and drummer David King, who are both Minnesota natives, in 1989. "We speak the tribal language [of the Midwest], which is really crucial for the sound of the band," Iverson says of the three musicians, who are in their early 30s and formed the Bad Plus in 2000. "We're not really 'New York cool,' but more like 'Midwestern friendly.'

"When we started, we didn't really realize the dimensions that it would take," he says. "We're all individuals, and that's to our benefit, 'cause it's a melting pot of ideas. Basically we speak the language of improvisers together."

Anderson and King grew up together, playing both jazz and rock. Yet Iverson, who is steeped in jazz and 20th-century classical music and served as music director for the Mark Morris Dance Group, hadn't even heard Nirvana before the Bad Plus was searching for popular songs to interpret.

"I've always been a very geeky guy," he says. "I didn't get to go to any of the good parties in high school. Part of that was not listening to a lot of rock music growing up. I think that helps sometimes in that I listen to things that we do without association. I wasn't skating in a roller rink when I first heard 'Heart of Glass,' and I wasn't feeling teen angst when I first heard 'Smells Like Teen Spirit.' [Anderson and King] put it on, and I'm like, 'OK, how does the melody go?'"

"It's really important to have a melody that can be played on the piano," says Iverson, who took harmonic ideas from Stravinsky in his approach to "Smells Like Teen Spirit." "I don't see any difference conceptually from Stravinsky taking a Russian folk song, Keith Jarrett taking a Rodgers and Hart tune or the Bad Plus taking a Nirvana piece [as a source]. You have the raw materials for your own palette."

As for the group's reputation for playing loud (particularly when it comes to King's mischievous drumming), Iverson says, "We play acoustic instruments. We just mike them up. There's a lot of stuff in our shows that's pretty quiet. We play really soft. And sometimes we play pretty darn loud." iB

The Bad Plus
plays Ryles June 17 and the JVC Jazz Festival in Newport Aug. 10.

Boston Exit

New York's Junior Vasquez brings a big-club vibe north

Boston's two biggest and longest-running gay celebrations come together on Sunday, June 15, for one very special night, when Boston Pride 2003 culminates in a wild closing party at Avalon. After 33 years, the annual Boston Pride festival of the local gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender communities has swelled to become a nine-day event. It seems only fitting, then, that one of the best-known names in nightlife presides over the wind-up party at Boston's legendary gay night, Avalon Sundays. Special guest Junior Vasquez rarely performs away from his home in New York, so Pride partygoers are in for a not-to-be-missed experience on the Avalon dance floor.

From the Tunnel to Twilo and Exit, Junior Vasquez has spent a decade and a half providing a sleazy, hard-edged house music soundtrack for the late-night underbelly of the New York City club scene. His influential work in the DJ booth and the recording studio has left a lasting mark on New York clubbing. Today, Vasquez's house music sound spans everything from hard tribal to classic gay anthems—and his hometown audience includes the New Jersey "bridge and tunnel" crowd as well as gay men. His appearance at Avalon will mark one of his only upcoming DJ engagements over the next few months; his weekly residency, "Earth" at Exit in New York ended last month.

As the Boston Pride block party on Stuart Street winds down on Sunday night, the festivities will be just getting started at Avalon. All are welcome, men and women, gay and straight. Just be sure to arrive early, because the club will fill up quickly.

Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-262-2424). June 15. Cover varies. 21+

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity). Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

Erin

You: Brunette hair, a great smile and always pleasant at the desk of the Residence Inn in Framingham. Your tag said Erin. Even though I saw you almost daily for a month, I didn't say what I wanted: "You're very cute and I would like to get to know you better." Me: 6'1" with brown hair (cut high and tight), blue eyes, bored of the chain restaurants. Now that I live here, I thought maybe you might like to get to know me.

To the Expert on International Standards

I was going up the Boylston escalator in the Pru May 20 when you rushed past on my left. You were the guy wearing a white shirt and black pants, carrying a Vinny Testa's bag full of clothes. About halfway up you were stopped by a group of men who were so selfishly taking up both sides of the escalator as they were riding up, probably doing it just to piss you off. You rudely said "Excuse me," which they either didn't hear or (rightly so) ignored. Well, you couldn't believe the nerve of them, so you figured that you would educate them: "You stand on the right and walk up on the left!" you snorted. "If ya wanna walk, take the stairs, [expletive]" was the response, to which you answered "Stand to the right, walk to the left—it's an international standard!" and stormed down the mall toward Huntington Ave. "What a loser," I chortled to myself, but the more I thought about it, I felt bad for you. You must be such a miserable person to be so rude to complete strangers. I hope you realize what a ridiculous scene you made. It's people like you who give this city such an unfriendly reputation. Please get help and maybe you'll be a happier person someday. (By the way, for liability reasons, most escalator manufacturers discourage walking up or down the steps while they're moving, since it can be potentially dangerous. Next time, take the stairs.)

Shot in the Dark

Every morning I have to make the decision of which coffee shop to pop into on Beacon Street. You see, at one shop I get coffee, at the other, I usually get a look that makes me smile and wonder what I have done to deserve such a smoldering glance. Instead of just ordering a shot in the dark, I thought I would take one. You have muttonchops and dark hair. If you're interested in the girl with brown eyes and short dark hair that always orders a loose-leaf English Breakfast, I'm game. I wouldn't mind seeing that smoldering look somewhere other than from across the counter.

Sexy Teacher Pumping Gas

The day was a Thursday or Friday, May 15 or 16. It was a nice spring day in Cambridge, and you were driving a silver Thunderbird(?) with three of your students. You were pumping gas and had on a pretty sweater and a long jean skirt. One of your students yelled, "My teacher likes you!" and I said that "I like her, too." You seemed to be embarrassed and drove away pretty quickly. I was mad at myself all day for not talking to you. Maybe you'll read this? If you do, and would like to talk, please let me know.

This Goes Out to FY

I know you're not even in Boston, but I had to let this out. You're the one that got away. We were together for only a short time until you left me. When we visited each other, it was hard to hold back all the feelings I still had for you. Today, I regret that I did not seize those opportunities. I don't know if you felt all the same things I felt then, or even now, but you have been occupying my thoughts a lot lately. I keep wondering what might have been had I just said or acted on what I've been carrying in my heart for so long. I even had a dream about you: You cupped my face in your hands and kissed me. It was so real and I wanted it to be. I keep reliving that dream in my head over and over. Right now, you're probably with someone, as I am now. Deep down, I hope fate brings us together again. I guess I'll just have to wait and see if my dream will come true.
—Looking for Closure

Chance It

Boy: It's been three years since I spotted you. We've sort of been friends and sort of not; sort of a fling and sort of not. It's always been on and off, and I've always been patient and tolerant. I think you know that I'm crazy about you, but you choose to ignore it by telling me that you're not worth it. You think I'm attractive and funny and we may eventually go out but you don't know when. I asked you out. You rejected me. Friends think I'm nuts because there are tons of guys out there who would die to go out with me, yet I only have eyes for you. Yes, we are having a good time but it hurts to hear that you dated other women when you could've picked me. Why do you always choose to invest in the wrong ones? I really believe I deserve a chance with you and that I would kick those women's butts as a fun date, if not appearance-wise. You are the only boy who's made my heart beat faster over the years. And I knew that when my eyes fell on you for the first time. Chance it with me. You have nothing to lose but a heart to gain.

Bob in Bukowski's

Friday May 30th: You are tall, blond and working on a Ph.D. at BU in engineering. You bought me a Summer Ale, and we chatted for a while before you had to leave suddenly. I kicked myself for not getting your number. E-mail me if you see this and are interested in another drink.

Charlize Theron

...Well, almost. I told you as much. I just wanted to thank you and your girlfriends for making me a part of the bachelorette party May 31. You gave me beads to make me feel part of the crew, and I loved hanging out with you and your friends. I had to run to catch the last T but it was worth it for the fun I had. I hope the October wedding is as awesome as you ladies were.

Party Pooper

You were so rude to those girls at a Back Bay bar May 31. I couldn't believe that you actually said something to them about keeping the noise level down at a bar on a Saturday night with the music blaring and everyone else laughing and having fun. If you want peace and quiet when you're drinking, stay home.
—Not the buzz kill

Daedalus, Cambridge, May 31

It was upstairs. You were with two of your friends. I was with my friend. I had blond spiky hair. We exchanged smiles, and when you left you said something as you walked down the stairs. I should have followed, but sadly I did not. So now is my second chance. I mean, everyone reads the IMPROPER, right? So if you are the cute girl with the short black hair and the intoxicating gaze, please reply to me, or I will be forced to go to Daedalus all the time.

rockie horoscope

GEMINI MAY 21-JUNE 20

A memorable birthday for Twins who are celebrating theirs this week. Not only is the Gemini sun, by merging with benevolent Jupiter for the first time in 12 years, dispensing wisdom and wealth in great measure, but passionate Mars in your marriage house is making your heart beat faster and your hormones surge. Rollicking enthusiasm and optimism over a change in attitude or life path you're about to undergo can be infectious. However, should your partner dare think otherwise, a major battle may ensue. Be smart, don't be a smart-aleck.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Your fairy godparent/confessor/shrink might have retreated from plain sight; nonetheless, you are still under his or her protective wing. While expansive Jupiter and the Gemini sun conjunct in your reclusive twelfth house, good opportunities are gestating, waiting to be born when Jupiter enters Cancer next month. However, this week you could run into a snag at work or difficulties if you're working out. Try to keep cool when other people are losing their tempers or coming on too strong. You don't have to play their game.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Big doings—the annual merger of your sun ruler and magnanimous Jupiter—in your Gemini house of hopes, wishes and the friends who help them materialize, e.g., your social and political allies. Their meeting on Flag Day is the luckiest planetary aspect of them all. Because Gemini complements Leo so well, the air fueling the fire, there shouldn't be a problem unless you're competing with a Mars-ruled Scorpio or an Aries who isn't particularly friendly with your friends. Then emotions could reach a feverish pitch.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

This week you just might need a weather vane to know which way the wind blows. From where you sit, it may seem that your best bet is to opt for the goodies promised when the sun and generous Jupiter meet in your airy Gemini midheaven. That would be greater prestige, promotions and an opportunity to spread your influence. Or you could watch your boss or a parent succeed in their professions. However, you might just as easily be seduced by a passionate plea from home in a cause that touches your heart and sets your mind ablaze. Oh, be careful around fire.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

You can avoid engaging in the mental gymnastics that your Gemini and Sagittarius friends are going through and still benefit from the results of their competition. As long as you don't travel or hang in cyberspace with either sign for any length of time, you'll be fine. Whatever happens, it's between them. The only danger comes on Flag Day when your Venus ruler lets you succumb to a pretty melody, a wonderful wine and an overactive imagination. Or to the gas fumes escaping from the stove.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

The last thing you want to hear is news of an impending confrontation, and moreover, that there's a part in the upcoming drama for you to play. Rather than "protagonist," how about settling for "line judge"? This way you can temper emotional involvement with a philosophical attitude and foresight, characteristics that come from having both of your ruling planets in Sagittarius, the sign of the Sage. The dispute, and its resolution, comes to a head when the sun and Jupiter oppose your Mars co-ruler on the 12th and 13th.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Archers born in mid-December are simultaneously cursed and blessed as your Jupiter ruler and the sun face off against provocative Mars in your sign—not to mention that they are also opposing your natal sun. Be very careful with sharp implements, machinery and fire; you don't want to hurt yourself or wind up cursing the gods. But if you need a boost of energy, these dynamic oppositions could be the ticket. The upside of this planetary picture is bountiful Jupiter embracing the Gemini sun, a marriage made in corporate/academic/athletic heaven.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Work, co-workers and health professionals like your pet's vet all fall into your sixth house of service. That's where the powerful combination of the Gemini sun and lucky Jupiter lands on your solar chart. "Bigger and better" is this duo's motto, so whether you're shelling out bucks or raking them in, expect to go beyond the usual limits you've set for yourself. Also expect more than what you usually get from others, e.g., genuine enthusiasm and a philosophical discourse.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Mid-February Aquarians are being set up to receive yet more good stuff, but not for another week. So if you're dazzled by all the attention you're getting or the excellence you're exhibiting, especially on the playing field, you ain't seen nothing yet. You will, however, have a clue once the sun and Jupiter meet in your Gemini house of fun and games, risk and romance on the 14th. From that point on, the stakes get bigger, the rewards more impressive. Until then, make a wish or two that dreams really do come true.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Read for Virgo. Your dilemma could be similar, although the specifics may vary. The goodies being promised will probably come from the family or be related to home and real estate, while the flames that ignite a passion may stem from some aspect of your work or be inspired by a client or your boss. However, gossip can be as dangerous to you as fire is to a Virgo. But because your Neptune ruler is the focus of Venus' devotion, you'll have a lots of beauty and romance in your life. Naturally, people are bound to talk.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

This could easily be the week that everything you've been working toward comes to a head. An enormous amount of positive energy is being directed to your Mars ruler from a combination of the creative sun and expansive Jupiter in Gemini. Even if you encounter some opposition in the form of constructive criticism or suggestions for a viable alternative, none of it is meant to thwart you or undermine your cause. In fact, midweek would be an excellent time to promote a project, publish your manifesto and sell your stuff.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Is this really the week you intend to ask for a raise? Because the vocal opposition between aggressive Mars and the "I see both sides of the argument" Gemini planets takes place across your financial axis, you probably should wait until the more bombastic elements of this confrontation blow over. Also, while your Venus ruler is under Neptune's spell next Thursday, your interpretation of reality is colored by faith and fantasy. Unless your relationship with your boss is based on romance or religion, you're kidding yourself. Or scamming somebody?

IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

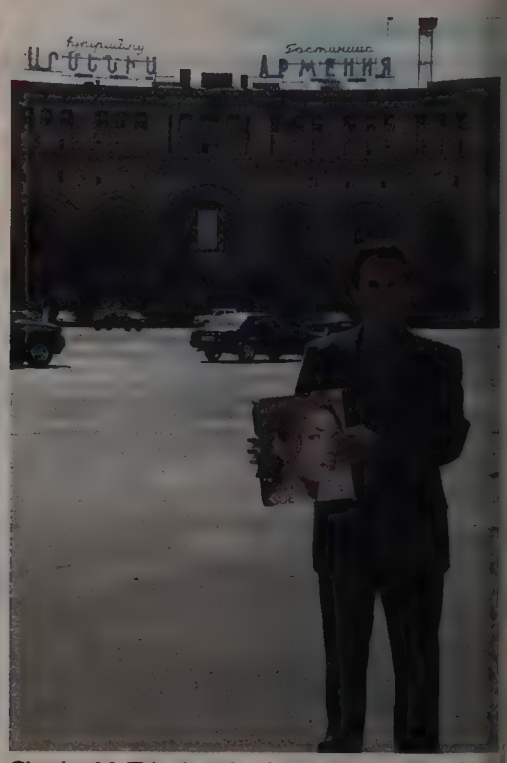
Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Stay tuned for the heartwarming story about how a little girl named Caroline Shinkle got lost at a concert and was raised by former members of the Eagles, Steppenwolf, the Moody Blues, Foreigner and Toto. Here they are after a reading lesson at the MGM Grand in Las Vegas.

Dave Mastronardi, Tim Doyle, Sean Cooper, Mike Taylor, Julio Fuentes, Joe Lusardi and Joe Taylor may have set a record by bringing eight different IMPROPERS to Mardi Gras in New Orleans. They later traded in all eight issues to get Doyle some bigger beads.

Stephen Patterson indulges a bit at the Hedonism III resort in Runaway Bay, Jamaica. If this doesn't look so hedonistic, note that we cropped out the all-nude open-bar all-you-can-eat buffet.

Former U.S. treasurer Bay Buchanan, John Adams and Pat Buchanan, editor of The American Conservative magazine, share an IMPROPER. Wait'll David McCullough finds out about this.



Charles M. Talanian checks out the renovations in progress at his hotel in Yerevan, Armenia. It looks like there will be plenty of parking.

Central air conditioning
for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat.

If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort® system doesn't require large metal ductwork, or major remodeling.

Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort® offers Lennox high efficiency air conditioning.

Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the Carmen Gala, clockwise from top: Mary and Sherif Nada; Arnold and Ellen Zetcher; Sharyn Fireman; Jossie Perez and Roger and Norma Saunders; Cassandra and Hod Irvine; Nicole and Ramsey Alsarraf.

CARMEN GET IT...

If it's Saturday, this must be the Four Seasons. For anyone caught up in the social swirl, that's how the month of May can feel, but the Boston Lyric Opera avoided the "same-old, same-old" with its annual black-tie gala, giving it a festive operatic theme.

Guests at the Carmen Ball came dressed as matadors, flamenco dancers, mantilla-clad widows, shady dames from Seville and even (in a rather loose interpretation) Carmen Miranda, wearing baskets of tropical fruit on their heads.

Present and accounted for: hotelier Roger Saunders and his gorgeous wife, Norma (the evening's co-chairs); fashion plate Ellen Zetcher and her CEO husband, Arnold (of Talbot's); opera stalwarts Sherif and Mary Nada and Suki and Miguel de Braganza; financial titan Richard DeAgazio and the stunning Tania Zouikin; bohemian grande dame Linda Cabot Black; car czar Bob Brest; tall drink of water John Osbon; opera fanatic Leon Bechet and his bride-to-be, Jennifer Borum; the maharani of good times, Cynthia Frederick, with the dashing Ronald Lee Fleming; absurdly attractive young things Nicole and Ramsey Alsarraf; and one woman sporting a diamond-encrusted breastplate that her insurance company allows her to wear only on special occasions.

Before dinner, curvaceous diva Jossie Perez performed the aria from Carmen and some lighter selections for the spellbound crowd. Among the comments overheard during the course of the evening: "There's a fine line between looking like Carmen and looking like you belong in a brothel," and the undeniable truism that "sometimes, life is stranger than opera."

However, the most welcome words came from Roger Saunders, who stepped up to the microphone and said, "My remarks will be like a lady's dress—long enough to cover the subject but short enough to sustain interest." (A bit of wisdom that every gala chair should heed.) After dessert and coffee, a sizzling flamenco band took over, and everyone appeared to have a wonderful time.

Not bad for an evening inspired by a tramp who works in a cigar factory.

A ROSALIE BY ANY OTHER NAME...

According to whoever keeps track of these things, Bostonians are a bunch of tightfisted skinflints when it comes to philanthropy, which only makes the largesse of a generous few all the more noteworthy.

Take tireless do-gooder and patron lady bountiful Rosalie Cohen, who gives unstintingly of both her time and energy, as well as money, to countless charities, and who serves on numerous boards of trustees, directors, overseers and whatnot. To acknowledge her contributions to the city, and to celebrate the establishment of a scholarship fund for Project Discovery in her name, the FleetBoston Celebrity Series threw a black-tie tribute dinner at the Copley Plaza.

Among the attendees: Rosalie's adoring husband, retired toy mogul Bert; publishing grand poobah Nader Darehshori; the soigné Mary Kakas; Skinner jewelry expert Gloria Lieberman and her handsome other half, Larry; the infectiously upbeat and totally lovable Lynne and Gary Smith; fashion avatar Sharyn Fireman and her shutterbug husband, Murton Sudalter; Wang CEO Joe Spaulding and the delightful Joyce; Beacon Hill doyenne Smoki Bacon and her inexhaustible other half, Dick Concannon; gardening columnist and little ray of sunshine Hilda Morrill; interior designer Benn Theodore; and Palm Beach socialite Nancy Katz (sporting a topaz as big as the Ritz).

In addition to performances by members of Ailey Camp and the Harlem Boys Choir, guests were entertained by drop-dead gorgeous soprano Karen Parks, and then everyone danced the night away to the Bo Winiker Orchestra.

Among the evening's most amusing comments: "When you're surrounded by all these rich people and the dessert is even richer, you know you shouldn't eat it."

From top: the new and improved Cutler Majestic Theatre; Ted and Joan Benard-Cutler.

JOAN AND TED'S EXCELLENT NEW THEATER...

Speaking of generous benefactors, Emerson College hosted a cocktail party on the stage of the newly renamed and refurbished Cutler Majestic Theater to fete über-philanthropists Ted and Joan Benard-Cutler, who footed the lion's share of the bill for restoring the magnificent building to its original grandeur.

A veritable Who's Who was on hand to congratulate them, including their son, Joel, and his wife, Randy; real estate magnate Douglas Krupp and his stunning wife, Judy; retail titan Stanley Berger and the delectable Sandy; gorgeous new mom Kelley Verrochi; Boston Ballet's dashing director Mikko Nissinen; brunette glamazon Susan Poduska; fashion plate Rita Goldman; mega-donors in their own right Bob and Ruth Remis; and one woman who looked at the portrait of the Cutlers that was unveiled that evening and said, "If everyone was as generous as Ted and Joan, there'd be no such thing as a black-tie fund-raiser." LISTEN TO THE MUSIC

What's the first album you ever bought? The first concert you attended? Most people who like music can answer those questions without having to think too hard, even if the events occurred decades ago. On the memorability scale, that puts the discovery of music (at least music beyond Sesame Street and Schoolhouse Rock) right up there with things like your first kiss, your first car and your first heartbreak.

Whether you're a serious scenester or an occasional concert-goer, you live in one of the nation's top cities for live music, especially rock, so opportunities to hear new sounds are all around you. (For proof, just take a look at our hefty music calendar in any given issue.)

But with so many choices, how do you narrow down the options? For four years in a row, we've been helping to build your listening list with a feature story on 10 of the city's top rock bands (see page 18). The IMPROPER's music columnist, Paul Robicheau, spent months scouring the clubs and polling music fans to select the groups from an enormous pool of candidates.

In addition to these local rock favorites, Boston is home to some nationally and internationally known musicians who've recorded with giants like Bob Dylan, Paul McCartney and Elton John and who now live, teach and play here. Get to know them in Robicheau's feature story "Taking Root in Boston" (page 25).

If what you want is simply a dose of blues, rockabilly or even Sinatra, Caitlin O'Neil's story "Variations on a Theme" (page 28) shows you where to go. Meanwhile Erin Hagedorn's "Amateur Night" (page 22) explores the DJ trend, which is quickly becoming live music's toughest competition.

PIGS FOR PEACE

At the end of her article on the New England Barbecue Society ("Hog Heaven," June 11), Ruth Tobias writes, "Heck, if NEBS offers any indication, even world peace could be just a U.N. barbecue away."

That makes sense. Only the United Nations would attempt to broker peace between the Israelis and the Palestinians with a Carolina pig-pickin' party.

A LOT O' GELATO

After reading your article on gelato ("A Scoop of Italy," June 11) I would like to add a South Shore location to your list: TCBY at Queen Ann's Corner in Norwell. Their gelato offerings are new and very good. My co-workers and I often return from lunch with a small treat.

—TERRY BRADY

Editor's note: Two other TCBY locations are also serving gelato—Kingston, Mass., and Providence, R.I.

CONTRIBUTORS

PAUL ROBICHEAU

Now in his 10th year as the IMPROPER's resident music scribe, Paul Robicheau has attended every annual WBCN Rock 'n' Roll Rumble during that time—and several before that. And that doesn't count the nights in between that he has trained his ears and camera lens on thousands of bands, both local and international. Robicheau spent 12 years reviewing rock, jazz and world music for the Boston Globe and has also published his work in such outlets as Rolling Stone, Spin, Boston Rock and MTV/SonicNet. He plays drums and percussion when he can, and has a dog named Elvis who mostly stays home and listens to the stereo. Robicheau's contributions to this issue include two feature stories, "Taking Root in Boston," (page 25) and "10 Bands That Rock," (page 18).

CAITLIN O'NEIL

Caitlin O'Neil's nonfiction work has appeared in the Boston Book Review, Poets & Writers magazine and the Cambridge Chronicle. She also writes fiction; her stories have appeared in the Beloit Fiction Journal, Faultline and Bridge Stories and Ideas, and she has been nominated for a Pushcart Prize. O'Neil lives in Cambridge and works at WGBH. Her IMPROPER debut, "Variations on a Theme," begins on page 28.

RED HOT

"Not that I'm wishing for more cold weather," says Brian Kelly, general manager of the new Red House restaurant in Harvard Square, which sports fireplaces in nearly every room, "but we're looking forward to winter. It'll probably be our biggest season." Before you rebuke Kelly for potentially cursing us with a summer as miserable as this past spring was, we should mention that business on the restaurant's patio was hopping on the night we visited—weather be damned. Locals have been flocking to this two-month-old restaurant to check out the newest venture from owner Paul Overgaag, who sold his über-popular Giannino's near the Charles Hotel last year to open the Red House—a project five years in the making.

That's right, you read correctly: five years. Red Tape would have been a more appropriate name, considering the arduous process Overgaag went through to get approval from Cambridge officials to convert the early-1800s-era house into a restaurant. At the end of it all, Overgaag has retained the charm of the house by leaving the original structure intact and adding only a dining room and bar in the back. When patrons walk in, they feel like they're entering an old Cambridge home, with its original floorboards, low ceilings and narrow, winding staircase. Small rooms on the first and second floors have been turned into private dining rooms, furnished with antiques that Overgaag procured himself. "It's truly a labor of love," says Kelly.

The cuisine is Mediterranean, with entrees like shellfish risotto ($17.95) and pan-roasted venison medallions ($19.95). As for the name: "People in the square have always referred to the place as the 'red house,' " says Kelly. "It just seemed fitting." 98 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-576-0605). —E.H. and J.S.

HAIR TODAY

Hair loss is usually perceived as a male condition, yet millions of women also suffer from thinning hair. While men have been taught to deal with this problem—slowing down hair loss with products and treatments—many women feel embarrassed by the condition and have no idea where to seek help. But the DiStefano Hair Restoration Center offers a solution. Its Women's Hairloss Center is the only clinic in New England that caters specifically to women's needs.

Hair loss can result from bad nutrition, heredity, thyroid abnormalities, reaction to medication or hormonal changes. The folks at the Women's Hairloss Center can help determine the cause of the hair loss and suggest treatment options. "We offer emotional, medical and nutritional support for women who have nowhere else to turn," says Dr. Mary Wendel, a physician at the center. www.hairman.com. (888-609-4247).

COMICS KING MIKE DREESE

Newbury Comics is the retail empire built by two MIT techies who started out with a comic book collection. Comics led to vinyl and vinyl led to mainstream music retailing. Twenty-five years later, those techies, Mike Dreese and John Brusger, have parlayed their funnies business into a 25-store, multimillion-dollar New England institution. Dreese recently sat down with us to talk about keeping it real for a quarter century in the record biz.

IB: How do you keep your prices so low?

MD: Basically, lots of volume. And most of our stores aren't as big as some of our competitors, but we have a much greater selection in a smaller space. We have one of everything, but if it sells we can replenish it within 48 hours. So it's more dollars per square foot.

IB: What are some of the pros and cons of selling novelties and knickknacks?

MD: Music is really easy. It's returnable to the manufacturer. When you're selling Simpsons action figures, if you don't sell them, you're stuck with them. Iraqi trading cards are selling right now, and they're really silly, but I guarantee that in a year no one will care. I don't know if people would buy Martha Stewart cards, but it would be neat. We think of ourselves as a cultural editor, and we offer things that we think are important in a timely manner.

IB: Are you planning to expand?

MD: We think we need to follow the trends of what's out there. We need a bigger store with richer content. I believe the music market will be half the size in three or four years. It depends on [technology], but we'll figure out a path that does make sense.

IB: Do you ever consider changing the store's name since it's not really about comics anymore?

MD: Years ago we thought of changing it to Mike and John's Records, but it allows us to be a bit of a chameleon. We've probably lost a lot of people just walking by over the years and not knowing what we were. But it was counter-culture to begin with, and I think it's good to have a little bit of a funky image.

IB: Are there people who make Newbury Comics their second home?

MD: Yeah, we always have more than our fair share of fanatics. They're really the people who keep you honest. They can be really annoying because they know so much more than you do, but they are very informative.

IB: What are you listening to these days?

MD: That's a sad tale. I can't even tell you what I'm listening to. Dirty Vegas, the new Annie Lennox record. I'm kind of a fuddy-duddy that way. Coldplay. Just random stuff. New Radiohead. All big bands. I don't have any insights into the budding under-stuff.

IB: What is your favorite band of all time?

MD: I would say the Gang of Four and second place is Mission of Burma.

IB: Best and worst thing about the Boston music scene?

MD: I think the best thing about it is it seems like it's quite vibrant. All things considered it seems like it's pretty healthy. I think the bad thing about it is it seems like it perpetually has an inferiority complex in comparison to New York or L.A. When the drinking age was 18, this town completely rocked because the club scene was driven by college kids. It's unfortunate today that people are staying at home playing violent video games instead of going to a club. —Jessica Iredale

KRISPY KREME & SUGAR HEAVEN

Sugar Heaven

Sweet Dreams...Newbury Street's newest shop, Sugar Heaven, is a sweet departure from its haute couture neighbors. Business partners David Sapers and Debra Novack (operating under the titles Sugar Daddy and Sugar Baby, respectively) opened their candyland dream store June 9 in the space vacated by one of Newbury's many art galleries. Novack had been itching to introduce Boston to the retro candy store concept, similar to the sweets factories of her native Toronto. "There's just nothing like this in Boston," says Novack. "This is a place where you can have 10 cents in your pocket or $10,000 and still have fun." The shop stocks almost 200 bulk items, a make-your-own-PixyStix station with 12 different flavors, 21 varieties of M&Ms (including silver and maroon), Hello Kitty candy and hard-to-find British and Canadian chocolates like Cadbury and Kinder. The shop also has a Pez wall and carries novelties such as Silly Putty and Rubik's Cube. There's even a sugar-free section and a wide variety of toothpaste and toothbrushes available for the sweet tooth with a guilty conscience. The store is open seven days a week until midnight. 218 Newbury St., Boston (617-266-6969).

Hot Stuff...Rumors that Krispy Kreme Doughnuts would be setting up shop locally have been tantalizing Bostonians for what seems like years now. Finally the wait is over. Krispy Kreme's first-ever Massachusetts store opened its doors at the break of dawn June 24 in Medford. KKD junkies can enjoy 14 varieties of doughnuts in addition to the signature hot original glazed. Just look for the sign that reads "Hot Doughnuts Now." 35 Revere Beach Parkway, Medford.

Closing Time...A series of abrupt bar/club closings has swept the city. Prime-time hot spot Limbo—the first in the series of see-and-be-seen niteries to reignite Boston's once-defunct Ladder District—closed its doors for good June 11. Co-owner Neil Robertson reports,"We did the slow wind-down over the last month, so we could do it as gracefully as possible. At some point in time, we'll all end up on a beach with a bar and have a lot better idea of how to run it." On the other side of town, lively Brighton boite the Elbow Room, which took over the legendary El Phoenix Room's digs two years ago, closed June 8. According to co-owner Doug Bacon, "It just didn't do well enough." The good news is that the owners have no intention of selling the space. Stay tuned to see their new concept for fall. And finally, Faneuil Hall's TK's Jazz Cafe went back to its roots June 16, when the owners decided to go with a good thing and make it an extension of Cheers. It reopened as sports-minded Sam's Café June 17.

New for Brew...During baseball season, Boston Beer Works' Canal Street location tends to be overshadowed by its Fenway-friendly counterpart. This year, the downtown brew depot's stock rises with the first official season of its Canal Street patio. Brewery patrons can sip their suds in the sun in the new open-air space. We recommend the watermelon ale. The crisp, cold, pale ale with natural watermelon infusions even comes with a juicy slice of melon. 112 Canal St., Boston (617-896-2337).—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

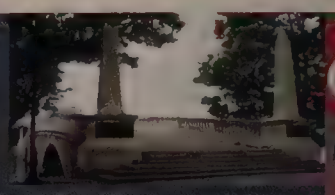
TV TIME



Sasha Brown received two marriage proposals last year—but only the first was real. In June, Brown's fiance Rob Worsham (a childhood friend with whom she had reconnected on a high school reunion Web site called Classmates.com) set up a scavenger hunt in Cambridge, leaving clues at some of the couple's favorite haunts. It started at Bally's in Porter Square, where Brown was handed a note that led her to Anna's Taqueria. Another note was waiting behind the counter with a T token and directions to Fire & Ice in Harvard Square. From there, she was sent to the Hong Kong. The final note directed her to the Weeks Footbridge, where Rob proposed to her.

The pair later related their story on Classmates.com. That led to a call from a producer at the ABC Family network who asked the pair to re-enact the proposal as part of a special called Will You Marry Me? that aired last February. In December, the couple re-created the scavenger hunt for the cameras—in six-degree weather, no less. But they did manage to make some extra cash for their trouble. And after all, how many people get to watch their proposal aired on national television? Have an engagement story? Send it to the word@improper.com.

Travel Made Easy...Despite our seaside locale, air travel is a necessary evil for most Bostonians looking to enjoy the open seas on a recreational cruise—Miami and New York are the normal ports of call for luxury cruise ships. But a large part of the hassle is about to be eliminated: Royal Caribbean is offering two charter cruises that depart from Boston Aug. 14 and 18. The Serenade of the Seas continues on to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Bar Harbor, Maine. Travelers will still have to endure that annoying life preserver drill, but security checkpoints, gate changes and delays can wait for your next vacation. (888-400-8794).

Anything but Plain..."We make coming home your greatest luxury" is the motto for the brilliantly colored, fresh-smelling new store the Urban Slipper. Former London resident Lynne McEachern sells all sorts of accouterments of lounge culture. Candles ($8-$24), slippers ($20), Egyptian cotton towels ($40), thermoses ($12-15) and comfy, chic lounge wear like knit tops and fleece pants ($15-$35) are some of the many products you will find there. 48 South St., Jamaica Plain (617-971-0870). www.theurbanslipper.com.

Burn with Designer...For most of us simple folk, the only hope for owning the couture creations of House of Dior designer John Galliano is to bid on an "authentic, like new" Dior piece on eBay. Those who are dying to nab a piece of the designer darling's line for a more reasonable price can head to tony Newbury parfumeur Diptyque and pony up $50 for the new Essence of John Galliano candle. What exactly does Dior's chief designer smell like? "Wild and woody, tinted with hints of iris, crowned with a touch of vanilla musk," reads the description. Interesting. The candle launched June 13 and is available exclusively at the Boston store, Barneys and eluxury.com until its nationwide launch Sept. 1. 123 Newbury St., Boston (617-351-2430).

Style File...Also new on Newbury is Elle Style. The women's clothing boutique opened May 16 in Daniello Shoes' former digs. Co-owner Rachel Li decided to take a break from her career as a software engineer and get in touch with her fashionable side. Tired of the "same old same old from boutique to boutique" in Boston, Li works hard to get exclusives with L.A. designers like Rock & Republic, young Hollywood's flavor of the week. "It's clothes for the young, modern working woman—20-somethings and older, but definitely not teens," says Li. 224 Newbury St., Boston (617-585-9922).

Art for the Masses...Boston's art scene can be a little intimidating for the average Joe. Newbury's bevy of galleries caters to the sophisticate, while the South End borders on avant-garde and Somerville is, well, quirky. Kate Ledogar, veteran curator from the Brookline Arts Center, Out of the Blue Gallery and the Weston Gallery, is determined to bring art to the general public with her new Somerville showroom, the 108 Gallery. "I see a real need for events that take place at Fort Point or in artist-run spaces to get to a bigger audience," she says. Ledogar hopes the gallery's debut show—Elaine Belsito's exhibition If You Lost Five Pounds You'd Be Perfect, which features a woman trying to fit into tight clothing and is performed in the front window—will draw a crowd of passersby. 108 Beacon St., Somerville (617-441-3833).

Sound Bytes...Boston-based musicians no longer need to schlep their band members, families and equipment to New York, L.A. or Nashville and camp out in hotel rooms while recording albums and demos. Veteran engineers Pete Peloquin and Todd Harris opened Boston Skyline Studios, the latest in state-of-the-art recording, in late May. The new facility, which boasts a model 4064 G+ 56-channel SSL console and a 96-channel Yamaha DM 2000 console, among many other hi-tech devices, awarded free recording time to WBCN Rock 'n' Roll Rumble winners the Dresden Dolls. JUST TRUST ME

The newspapers don't lie. Oh, wait. Yes they do.

Many of you may be aware of the recent scandals that have cast a pall on the profession of journalism. Jayson Blair of the New York Times was found to have made up facts and plagiarized stories from other reporters. Rick Bragg, also of the Times, may not have credited interns and stringers for research. Robin Gregg of the New York Post admitted to plagiarizing a story from the National Enquirer on Wal-Mart's decision to stop selling Kathie Lee Gifford's line of sportswear. And if you can't trust a journalist to give you an honest story about Kathie Lee Gifford's sportswear at Wal-Mart, how can you trust us when we tell you that Jennifer Lopez may or may not have buttock implants? I can't speak for my colleagues, many of whom are busy this time of year molting, but you will never find any such despicable shenanigans in this column.

As I gaze out across the canopy of the banyan forest that surrounds my treetop geodesic dome in Beacon Hill, I wonder how it came to this. I suppose it's because we, as reporters, are so eager to please our readers that sometimes we take things too far. We want you to find our articles interesting and compelling, and while that's no excuse for falsehoods and plagiarism, you've got to understand that this is a very stressful profession. Producing a timely story on a tight deadline is not an easy, straightforward task, like performing emergency room surgery to reattach someone's arm after a thresher mishap. Even for world-class wordsmiths like me there are gray areas—gray areas that can become fuzzy and foggy, like a piece of lint in some fog.

Because I believe in being completely honest, I'd like to take this opportunity to clarify a few questions that have arisen over the years. After all, I have nothing to hide.

For starters, my June 1997 article entitled "I Fact-Check Copy All Day for This Band of Morons and I Don't Get Paid a Cent for It" should have been credited to an intern. As the Times' Bragg has pointed out, journalists often use research from stringers and interns without providing credit. In my case, however, the intern wrote the entire article except for the byline, which I typed in myself. Again, I cite this example only to show that I am on the up-and-up.

It has also been suggested that I plagiarized portions of my serial novel published on these pages from the years 1983 to 1999. Specifically, jealous critics have accused me of stealing that work's main character, plot, setting, text and other minor details from some obscure old novel. To imply that my wondrous tale of an enig matic millionaire named Gatsby is culle from another source is ludicrous. Coinci dentally, my Gatsby does bear some resem blance to a character in a story by one Scott Fitzgerald, but in my novel Gatsb drives a black Duesenberg, whereas Fitzger ald's Gatsby drives a yellow Rolls-Royc This is just one of many important differ ences. If you accept the fact that there ar no completely original ideas and no write can have read everything that has eve been published, how is one supposed t avoid composing a piece that inadver tently shares a few similarities with a previ ously published work? It really makes m wonder whether 'tis nobler in the mind t suffer the slings and arrows of outrageou fortune, or to take arms against a sea o troubles, and by opposing, end them. S please believe me when I say that I wi never plagiarize another writer's work.

I'd also like to add that in the future I wi double-check my sources to make sure the exist. And it was perhaps ill-advised t write, as I did in our last issue, that Saddam Hussein's mustache had been foun amongst some rubble in Baghdad. Like th accompanying sidebar on terrorists plan ning to crop-dust major cities with LSD that item should have been double checked. My wire service, the Weekly Worl News, refused to divulge its sources on th above stories, which is understandable give the sensitive nature of the information. know it's easy for readers to harbor skepti cism when even the New York Times is unde fire for factual errors, but I place my unwa vering faith in the publication that brok the story when Satan escaped from Hell.

IT WAS PERHAPS ILL-ADVISED TO WRITE AS I DID IN OUR LAST ISSUE, THAT SADDAM HUSSEIN'S MUSTACHE HAD BEEN FOUND AMONGST SOME RUBBLE IN BAGHDAD

Your faith in the media might be shaken right now. All I can do is pledge that I wil continue to tell the truth, especially if m employers make me take another poly graph test. iB

HERSHEY FELDER

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Actor, playwright, composer and concert pianist Hershey Felder, 34, was born and raised in Montreal and received a music degree from McGill University before honing his craft internationally. As a concert performer, he has appeared in the U.S., Canada, the United Kingdom, Poland, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Austria and Israel. His original written compositions include the operatic musicals Fairytale and Noah's Ark, and Aliyah, a concerto for piano and orchestra, and his stage credits include Fiddler on the Roof, Waiting for Godot, Schlemiel I, Lies My Father Told Me, The Importance of Being Earnest and The King and I. Currently a visiting scholar in residence at Harvard, he has staged his one-man show, George Gershwin Alone, at the American Repertory Theatre, as well as Broadway's Helen Hayes Theatre and Ford's Theatre in Washington, D.C. The only artist since Gershwin's death to gain permission to play the composer in a major stage production, Felder will reprise the show at the ART from July 5–26. From August 1–17, he appears at the ART (opposite Stephanie Zimbalist and Anthony Crivello) in the world premiere of Romantique, a play about the love affair between George Sand and Frederic Chopin. Felder lives in Cambridge with his wife, Kim Campbell, who served as Canada's first female prime minister.

Jonathan Soroff: I love New York in June, how 'bout you?

Hershey Felder: I do, but only until the pavement gets sticky.

JS: State of the American theater?

HF: Questionable. Considering that I'm Canadian, I'm giving you an outsider's view, but in general, I think the economics of New York means fewer risks are taken. There's too much money involved.

JS: So the cost of mounting a show makes them less adventurous artistically?

HF: Well, I think that making new theater, the experiments that went on in the '50s, '60s and '70s aren't happening now in New York, because I don't think people can afford it. With film, it's so easy to get an incredible spectacle for 10 bucks. It's a lot harder to ask someone to spend $100. You gotta serve up a whole lotta new for that.

JS: Was George Gershwin Alone expensive to mount?

HF: In Florida or Boston, it cost $30,000-$40,000 a week. On Broadway, it cost $120,000 a week. So the difference is enormous, by a factor of three or four, to pay for things like New York advertising.

JS: Do you perform only on Steinways?

HF: Yes. It's contractual, as well as being something my heart desires.

JS: Greatest moment onstage?

HF: Broadway. 2001. I'm standing onstage at the Helen Hayes Theatre. Basically, the front row is right underneath my nostrils, looking straight up my nose. I look down, and there's this little old lady looking up at me through a pair of binoculars. She's literally a foot-and-a-half away. As much as I think I have stagecraft, I was pissing myself for the next hour and a half.

JS: Most embarrassing moment performing?

HF: When I was 15, I had two disasters while doing successive plays. In one, I was supposed to leap off a ramp, and on opening night my shoe got caught in the set and pulled it down behind me. I'm thinking, "I want to die." Two months later, I was playing a shopkeeper, and there was this window blind I was supposed to pull down. I do it once; it snaps back up. I do it twice; it snaps back up. The third time, I yanked it so hard it wouldn't snap back, and at the end of the scene, it was supposed to go back up. Instead, I just ripped the f--king thing off its hinges, looked at the audience and said, "We're open 24 hours."

JS: Where did the Gershwin fascination come from?

HF: I didn't start out as a Gershwin fanatic. I started in classical music. I became fascinated with Gershwin when I did some work for Steven Spielberg's Shoah project, interviewing Auschwitz survivors. There was a guy I met who used to whistle "Rhapsody in Blue" for the SS, and it saved his life. It's an amazing, amazing story. He was Mengele's errand boy, and whistling Gershwin kept him alive.

JS: That was the genesis for the show?

HF: Not really. I did a performance in L.A. that recounted that particular story, and as soon as the review ran in the L.A. Times, I got a cease and desist order from the Gershwin estate. So I tried to get permission from them. Eventually, I met Adam Gershwin, and he and I became friends. In fact, I hosted the bris for his son, Noah, in my house, and I played the baby's first "Rhapsody in Blue" for him, with two other generations of the family there. It was so cool.

JS: And I assume, given [the show's] financial success, that the Gershwin estate is pleased.

HF: Noah's wearing designer clothes.

JS: How do you stay interested in a character for 1,200 performances?

HF: The difficulty and complexity involved in making it look natural every night is so huge that it's a constant challenge.

JS: In your new show, Stephanie Zimbalist plays George Sand. Were you a Remington Steele fan?

HF: Oh, yeah. I had the hots for her when was a kid. I went to summer camp with cousin of hers, and I was like, "Oh, I'm on step closer to Stephanie Zimbalist!"

JS: Worst place you ever performed?

HF: The natural history museum in Ne York, with those f--king elephants and th saber-tooth tiger staring up at me. You play a note and by the time it got to th back of the hall it was two days later. It wa sheer torture.

JS: What about Ford's Theatre? Was it creepy looking up every night at the box wher Lincoln was assassinated?

HF: Creepy but remarkable. Of course, th first thing I did in rehearsal was go into th box. There's the sofa, and there's an en graving of Washington that supposedly ha blood on it. All the ghosts are there. Yo just see Booth jumping out, getting his spu caught on the flag. It's just incredible.

THE DIFFICULTY AND COMPLEXITY INVOLVED IN MAKING [YOUR CHARACTER] LOOK NATURAL EVERY NIGHT IS SO HUGE THAT IT'S A CONSTANT CHALLENGE

JS: Favorite Yiddish expression or word?

HF: Ongepatshket. It means something ver involved or ornate. Then there are th English words that sound Yiddish—lik far-fetched, far-flung.

JS: Your wife was prime minister of Canada. Kind of an interesting thing for the ol' resume?

10 bands that rock

OUR ANNUAL ROUNDUP OF ROCKERS ON A ROLL

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Given the ever-morphing matrix of sounds and characters in the Boston rock community, it's neither possible, nor fair, to rank the scene's "best" bands. Still, after many nights of checking out bands in bars and clubs (including WBCN's recent 25th annual Rock 'n' Roll Rumble), listening to countless CDs and comparing notes with local scenesters, we have determined that these 10 rock outfits are currently among Boston's most distinctive.

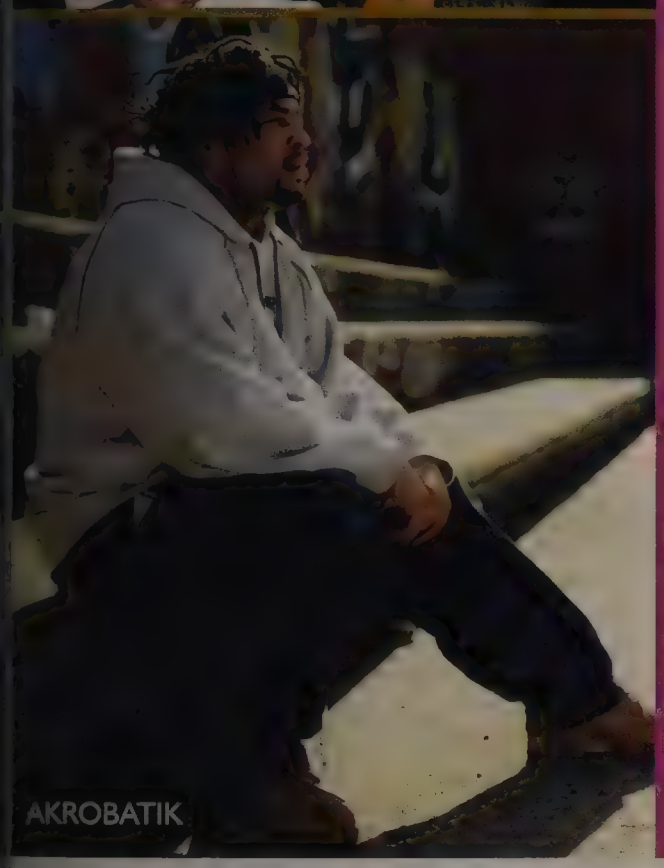
the dresden DOLLS

A punk-cabaret duo in whiteface may have seemed like a long shot to win this year's WBCN Rumble. But anyone who caught the Dresden Dolls' dramatic, sophisticated sets at the Middle East recently witnessed a dynamic blend of concept and talent that suggested a darker Tori Amos on a Kurt Weill bender.

"I've been amazed at the spectrum of people who are into us," says singer-pianist Amanda Palmer, a onetime Cure fan who formed the band in 2000 with drummer Brian Viglione, a sympathetic foil whose tastes ran to free jazz and hardcore. "I come from the performance-art world, so we were doing a lot of gigs in people's lofts and galleries," she says.

Although Palmer used to wear a wedding dress while posing as a "living statue" in Harvard Square, she says she used to be "very anti-costume" when performing music. "When I played solo before I met Brian, I would never wear makeup. I thought it was pretentious and affected," says Palmer. "If people were coming to see my songs, they would get the raw deal." Audiences still get the raw deal, even if the duo is dolled up cabaret-style (she in garters, he in a bowler hat) and occasionally expands to a quartet with guitar and bass, both live and on an upcoming (as yet untitled) CD produced by Martin Bisi (Swans, Sonic Youth). "The beautiful thing about the piano is you can basically do everything with it," Palmer says. "You can play it lower than a bass, play percussive high stuff or mimic an entire orchestra."

The Dresden Dolls play the Middle East Downstairs July 1.



apollo SUNSHINE

Apollo Sunshine tends to radiate confusion. For starters, the mischievous rock trio juxtaposes an unlikely combination of Beatlesque harmonies, pedal-steel tonalities and keyboard thrashings. And during the WBCN Rumble, the wild-card finalists indulged in such gambits over their three nights as handing out gum for fans to chew in rhythm with the music, live video, a baton twirler, Dixieland horns and synchronized, strobe-lit dance moves.

"Bands pigeonhole themselves into some classification or genre where any song they write, they have to make it sound like that, and we went, 'Screw that; let's do anything we want,'" says singer-bassist-keyboardist Jesse Gallagher. "But we still want to make it accessible. "We're pretty normal guys. We really just consciously try to do some fun things."

Gallagher, who sports a '70s-style haircut and mustache, admits to such obvious models as the Beatles and the Flaming Lips. But the trio also digs jazz, metal and, in guitarist Sam Cohen's case, rockabilly. Drummer and John Bonham disciple Jeremy Black's favorite album is the Beach Boys' Pet Sounds. The young trio, who viewed themselves as outcasts when they attended Berklee College of Music, retreated to upstate New York for the summer of 2002 to record their pop symphonies in Black's parents' barn. The band's debut CD, Katonah, is out soon on SpinArt.

Twinemen drummer Billy Conway recalls one night when a club sound engineer asked, "Have you guys ever heard of a band called Morphine?" The irony, of course, was that Conway and Twinemen saxophonist Dana Colley were two-thirds of Morphine, giving moody counterpoint to the voice of the late Mark Sandman.

TWINEMEN

"When Dana and I play music together, that's what we sound like," says Conway from the New Hampshire home he shares with singer Laurie Sargent, the third principal in the sparse, evocative group that adopted its name from an unpublished cartoon Sandman created about a ball of twine with three heads.

"The concept of Twinemen fits beautifully," Sargent says. "'Cause we can't cut the thread of what our past is, nor should we."

The trio wasn't even supposed to be a band when they started recording at High-N-Dry, the Inman Square studio they inherited from Sandman. "There were no expectations," Sargent says of the organically built songs that became the Twinemen's debut CD. Adds Conway: "The only kind of m.o. we had was to try and make music that's hard to describe."

The Twinemen's music is more jazzy, atmospheric and experimental than Morphine's. All three sang and played some guitar on the CD, Colley played piano, and various friends chipped in along the way (bassist Andrew Mazzone also regularly helps out onstage).

"It's a little bit like a piece of clay, where we put our hands on it together and singularly," Conway says. "It's made touring so much fun, because the songs are still growing."

akrobatik

Dorchester-bred rapper Akrobatik made sure he had his bases covered when he made his new full-length debut, Balance, a broad, confident effort that bridges social commentary and braggadocio, slick textures and cracking beats.

"I'm getting a lot older and trying to get wiser," says 29-year-old Akrobatik (born Jared Bridgeman), who made his first splash with the single "Internet MCs" in 1999. "I just wanted to give people a full idea of what I'm about."

Akrobatik's rhythm is both blunt and fluid as he rides varied tracks from producers including DJ Fakts and Edan, trades off with Mr. Lif in "Wreck Dem" and honors African-American history in the jazzy "Remind My Soul," citing "the time we were great, before the self-hate."

"I want to make music that doesn't go too far out of the comfort zone of people, but I do want to challenge them," says Akrobatik, whose inspirations include A Tribe Called Quest, KRS-One and LL Cool J. "It's always a point of mine to analyze the actions of people, government, myself."

helicopter HELICOPTER

Many Boston bands say they tour, but few spend as much time in the van as Helicopter Helicopter, which recently put out its fourth CD, Wild Dogs with X-Ray Eyes.

"We're on an indie label, so this is the way we promote ourselves," says singer-guitarist Chris Zerby. It helps that the quartet's new label, Kentucky-based Initial Records, gives Helicopter Helicopter a broader launchpad for distribution than the group's previous home, Boston's Lunch label.

Chalk it up to evolution for the five-year-old band fronted by Zerby and Julie Chadwick, whose overlapping vocals and guitar parts give the group its distinctive sound, rounded out by bassist Shawn Setaro and new drummer Dave Foy. And Helicopter Helicopter's shift into darker but more polished pop terrain hasn't negated the occasionally edgy accent.

"We have a lot of weapons in our bag and try to use them sparingly," says Zerby, a former punk rocker who is also a short-story writer with a master's degree in creative writing. "I have stuff in stories where lines pop up in the songs and vice versa. It definitely blends into each other."

the DOWNBEAT 5

Singer-guitarist Jen Rassler calls the Downbeat 5 "just a bunch of hacks playing together and getting in the groove." But that groove has grown more powerful, even landing the saucy garage-punk stompers in the WBCN Rumble semifinals.

With inspirations ranging from '60s girl groups to '70s New York punk, the Downbeat 5 were born when guitarist JJ Rassler urged his wife to pursue music, and they recognized the potential they'd have if they played together. "It clicked immediately," says Jen, and while the couple has since separated, the musical spark remains. "We still obviously have a serious, dynamic relationship."

JJ, who pioneered Boston's rock underground with DMZ, the Odds and the Queers, adds, "I've had a couple of partners in the past who were worthwhile, and this is heads-and-tails above those."

The best evidence is the song "My Way," driven by drummer Dan McCarthy and bassist Mike Yocco in the classic "Boston beat" style of the Modern Lovers and the Nervous Eaters. One of many raw tunes on the band's debut for the Sympathy for the Record Industry label (former home of the White Stripes), it focuses the attitude in Jen Rassler's edge-of-scream vocals.

"That's how I get into it," she says. Adds JJ: "Some of my solos are a knee-jerk reaction to her screaming in my ear."

The Downbeat 5 play the Abbey Lounge July 11.

consonant

When singer-bassist Clint Conley first picked up a guitar and returned to music with his new group, Consonant, it was overshadowed by the reunion of his legendary post-punk band Mission of Burma after a two-decade hiatus.

Consonant's debut CD also had the tentativeness of conception and execution that one finds in a band that hits the studio before the stage. It'll be a different story in August when Consonant releases its second CD—a more realized effort that gracefully shifts from crunching chords to ethereal space, variously evoking '60s psychedelic rock, shoe-gazer guitar washes and strummed indie rock.

"That we're biting into the music harder is apparent," says Conley, whose bandmates are guitarist Chris Brokaw (Come), drummer Matt Kadane (Bedhead) and bassist Winston Braman, an alumnus of Fuzzy who also plays in the primal upstarts the Count Me Outs. "The first time, we were just feeling each other out. Now we're having more collaboration."

The same went for the lyrics, written by poet Holly Anderson. "The first record, I took poems that I bent and hammered into a template," Conley says. "This time there was more back-and-forth." And the same might be said for Burma, which has developed new songs and still plays sporadically. "The Burma [reunion] shows were a very confidence-inspiring, powerful experience," he says. "We probably play better now than in the old days."

jake brennan & THE CONFIDENCE MEN

Jake Brennan recorded his new single, "Believe Me," plus 40 more songs aimed at a full-length CD due for release in the fall, during a spirited three-night party at producer Paul Kolderie's new Cambridge studio, at the former home of Fort Apache Studios.

"We wanted the chaos factor to keep it energized and hungry, and not get studio-ized," Brennan says of sessions in which local luminaries like the Gentlemen's Mike Gent and members of Either/Orchestra took the stage. "It also keeps you inspired, because you don't want to sit on the sidelines."

Brennan didn't sit too long on the sidelines after quitting the hardcore punk band Cast Iron Hike to write music with a more classic flavor, much like his musician father, Dennis."I wouldn't call it 'roots' because that has a geriatric, old-fogy image," says 25-year-old Brennan, "and there's nothing boring or lame about Chuck Berry, Tom Petty or Bruce Springsteen."

Brennan's new CD includes raving takes of Berry's "I Want to Be Your Driver," and his own "Skinny Legs and All," but it also delivers tender tunes tinged with pedal steel from Steve Malone of his band the Confidence Men. "We didn't leave the studio," adds Brennan. "We locked ourselves in."

Jake Brennan & the Confidence Men play the Beachcomber in Wellfleet July 3.

heavy STUD

Meredith Byam and Melissa Gibbs were into softball and music as childhood friends in Lakeville, Mass. But it was music that had won them over by the time they settled in Boston for college.

"We lived in a basement, and we were down there listening to the Beatles nonstop," says Gibbs, now 29. And when they saw Elastica play Axis in 1995, they decided to start a band. Two years later, while working at Fort Apache Studios, they got to sing on Morphine's Like Swimming CD. But starting their own band proved tougher when it came to drafting a rhythm section.

Today, with Star Ghost Dog alumni Owen Burkett on bass and Chris Foley on drums, Byam and Gibbs are finally on track, playing sandblasted pop on vintage guitars in Heavy Stud, which is named after an Ampeg guitar brand.

A favorite at the Abbey Lounge, the quartet is about to release its full-length debut Connection Rejection next month and had four of its songs placed on the WB teen soap opera Dawson's Creek. "Over the Top" was even aired in two separate episodes. "It was a party scene the first time they used that song," Gibbs says. "The next time, some girl was carted away to rehab."

Heavy Stud plays the Abbey Lounge July 19.

When he played keyboards for rising Boston rocker Bleu, John Paul Powell missed opening some big shows for John Mayer so he could play a local club with his own band, Chauncey. "It's my baby, whereas Bleu was a lot of fun," Powell says of his pop-rock quintet, which takes its name from Peter Sellers' character in the film Being There. "For anyone who's trying to play music, you have to be totally into it."

Not that Chauncey has missed out on the fun over the past three years. While the band solidified its membership, it played dates with Midnight Oil, and it's currently recording its second CD with producer Steve Albini (Nirvana, Pixies). "It sounds like us at a gig," Powell says of the sessions. "It's like photorealistic. He makes very dynamic records."

Realism also plays to the human dynamics in Chauncey's music. "There's always been a hint of humor in what we do," says Powell, who cites classic models like the Beatles and Pink Floyd. "And it's weird—cause a lot of our songs are melancholy and melodramatic." IB

Chauncey plays the Lizard Lounge July 29.

INSTANT GRATIFICATION

On-the-spot recordings let fans relive the night's music on the way home from the show

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Ken James bought a live disc of a recent Kay Hanley performance at the Paradise only 15 minutes after Hanley left the club's stage. But as he got the singer to autograph the CD, he explained that he had actually been waiting 15 years for this moment.

"I remember talking about this to friends in high school," James, now 35, says of the idea. "I've been bootlegging concerts forever. Now I don't have to, and I can walk away with a CD."

James' 15-year fantasy has come true for many rock fans at the Paradise recently, and it's a trend slated to spread to other clubs and larger venues—in Boston and beyond. The vehicle: a new Clear Channel service called Instant Live.

The idea came from attorney Steve Simon, an executive vice president for music at Clear Channel who knew that legal seminars and church services were already selling instant CDs of the proceedings. So, he figured, why not concerts?

"I'd much rather see a candid photo than a posed photo, and I'd much rather hear a live recording than something that's contrived in the studio," says Simon. He's overseen the service for several Paradise shows since last fall, with such acts as the Samples and the Boston bands Hybrasil and Spookie Daly Pride.

As Simon laid the groundwork for Instant Live, he became aware of bands, like Pearl Jam and Phish, that were making current recordings of their concerts available to fans on fairly quick turnaround, either in stores or via the Internet.

However, he says, "No one did it contemporaneously. If we could do it sooner, we could do it better. It's 'turnkey,' on-the-spot immediate gratification. It's another thing to have it in your hand and in your car CD player on the way home from the show."

Instant Live records artists from the soundboard on digital equipment, then burns CDs on multiple computer drives. The process usually takes several minutes, enabling fans to buy discs—in simply designed jewel cases—on their way out the door.

Hanley, who played only a 35-minute set supporting Suzanne Vega (who opted not to use Instant Live), charged $10 per CD. But most artists charge $15 for a longer, two-disc set, with profits split 50-50 between the act and Clear Channel. Hanley sold 57 copies of her disc, which is slated to join other Instant Live titles at local Best Buy stores. (Some titles are available through individual bands' Web sites.)

"I want to look for the nefarious side to it, and I'm waiting for people to start bitching," says Hanley, who recorded an acoustic-based set with husband Michael Eisenstein, her former bandmate in Boston favorites Letters to Cleo, on keyboards and second guitar. "But it seems like a good idea."

Hanley's manager, Michael Creamer, adds, "Kay hasn't really been touring because of their kids, so it gives people an idea of what she sounds like live if they're not in New England. If this gets them excited, that's good."

Simon says the actual recordings cost less than $500 to make, and the business model works because Clear Channel is also the promoter that controls the venue, removing potential extra costs.

"The technology is actually perhaps the easiest part," he says. "The most difficult part is the execution: dealing with the bands, the songwriters and publishers."

Indeed, bands give Clear Channel their song list at least three days before the show so Simon can arrange licensing, an important step for cover songs.

"I think it's the first time anyone has successfully gotten our band to make a set list," says Dan Millen, manager of Spookie Daly Pride, which sold close to 300 copies of the live CD, even though the band already lets fans tape its shows with their own recording gear.

"Taping is for a specific group of people who want to be into it," says Millen. Most people would rather pay the $15, he says, to get the soundboard-quality discs. IB

In the old days, the DJ's first and foremost job was to rock the party; to jolt the club with energy and to fill up the dance floor and keep it full till the break of dawn. Since DJs in Europe started giving live music a serious run for its money in the mid-'90s, the DJ trend has made its way to America via artists like Paul Oakenfold and Carl Cox. Nowadays, people line up to see innovative icon DJ Shadow, and simply stand and watch as he plays music that is ostensibly meant for dancing. Kid Koala, another groundbreaking American DJ, just sold out two shows at the Brattle Theatre, playing to a crowd comfortably ensconced in seats for the duration of the show. (There was even a game of bingo in between sets—a far cry from the rump-shaking raves that used to define DJ culture.)

ROOKIE DJS SCRATCH THEIR WAY INTO THE SPOTLIGHT

BY ERIN HAGEDOR

More and more venues such as lounges, bars and restaurants are replacing jukeboxes and live musicians with turntables and DJs. As with any trend, the bigger it gets (top DJs now rake in $30,000 a night at the bigger clubs in Boston and other major cities), the more people become interested in exploring it as a hobby or a career. Instead of strumming their Gibson SGs in their parents' basements, today's kids are fiddling with Technics 1200s, and turntables are outselling guitars at a remarkable rate of two to one. Mix CDs (compilations of songs by a variety of artists) from top DJs like Fatboy Slim and Lo Fidelity Allstars rival the sales of rock albums, and easily downloadable programs enable people to play and mix MP3s, opening up a world of music previously available only on vinyl. If you happen to have a hankering to try out your own turntable skills, well—join the club.

In Boston, professional and amateur opportunities for aspiring mix masters apart from the club scene are growing. Stores like Puma and Louis Boston, for example, bring in local, largely unknown DJs on a weekly basis, and Ozone, DKNY and Niketown regularly host DJs.

It's not surprising, then, that in January, DJ Manolo, a Lansdowne Street luminary for more than a decade, opened up a "school" for wannabe-DJs with fellow DJ veteran Peter Souhleris. The first of its kind in New England, the DJ Mix Academy in Winchester accepts students with different levels of experience—from those who have never been in front of a turntable to those who have spun for years. So far, the Mix Academy has graduated about 100 certified spinners—everyone from college students to the more surprising lot of moonlighting professionals, including middle-aged lawyers and even two doctors from Mass General Hospital. With trained teachers, a strict curriculum and a bona fide classroom setting (students have individual turntable stations that face the instructor, learn about the history of DJ'ing and are assigned homework), the academy offers DJ'ing 101 courses for beginners—a four-week class that costs $325—and more advanced-level classes like DJ'ing 201 for intermediates.

"Back in the day, everyone wanted to be Eddie Van Halen, and now they want to be Paul Oakenfold," Manolo says. "When I DJ'ed at Avalon, I'd be flooded with e-mails and phone calls from people asking 'Can you teach me how to DJ?' every single day." So Manolo put together lesson plans, put up some flyers and opened up shop. "The response has been great," he says. "I knew people wanted this, but I didn't know how much." Although some of his students surely aspire to the fame and fortune of a professional gig, Manolo says he's careful not to mislead them. "We stress that we're not turning them into polished, professional DJs. You're not going to graduate and go straight to spinning at Avalon."

Of course, there are those who opt to skip the Academy and take their lessons at the school of hard knocks. In many major cities, scores of DJ hopefuls work on their own to learn the trade, and Boston is no exception. In May, Stickman Productions put on Open Turntable Night at the Ekco Lounge—a first for Boston, although similar events take place in Montreal, San Francisco and New York. A mass e-mail message invited walk-ins to try their hand at DJ'ing on a "first-come, first-spin" basis (BYO needles and vinyl). The result was a night of music spun by DJs of all skill levels and backgrounds.

Tyler Hendrie, who co-produced the evening and is himself an "amateur" DJ of eight years, was thrilled by the outcome and plans to host more events. "There were people who can mix the Beatles with Tupac and others who have never touched vinyl before."

But the ability to mix and scratch records—or even the desire to—is unnecessary for another faction of Boston's amateur DJs. In fact, most people who DJ at amateur nights have no aspirations of becoming a full-fledged club DJ and are proud to be a part of what is becoming the unprofessional DJ movement. And they are finding more opportunities simply to spin their favorite music for a crowd. That is thanks in large part to rock maven Lilli Dennison. During her stint as manager at B-Side Lounge a few years ago, Dennison started up a weekly "celebrity" DJ night, and the trend has since caught on all over town at places like Davis Square's Orleans restaurant and the Kendall Square pool hall Flat Top Johnny's.

Celebrity DJs in a city that is virtually Hollywood celebrity-less, you ask? Well, "celebrity" is defined loosely, and the term is generally a bit tongue-in-cheek. The celebs are really a mix of radio DJs, music critics, band members and average Joes who collect interesting music and want to share it. This can be anyone at all, and just like finding out someone can sing, it can be a pleasant surprise to discover who has a hidden stash of fascinating albums. Paul Hathaway, a chef at Washington Square Tavern, for example, has an enormous collection of garage/post-punk music that he unveiled at B-Side.

On any given amateur/celebrity DJ night, you might find someone dusting off their old 45s and spinning old punk and rockabilly. Or it could be a couple who shares a love of old garage and blues playing their favorite songs for the evening. One night at B-Side, a musician couple, Children's Television Workshop's Ken Field (of the band Board of Education) and his wife, Karen Aqua (who also plays in local bands), brought in Sesame Street–themed music. Most junior DJs play a variety of songs from their record and CD collections, sort of like making a live mix tape for the audience—which is, incidentally, often largely populated by their friends. But more and more venues find that there's a devoted crowd who come to see who is playing what each week.

Dennison says she started the night because she knew so many people who had amazing music collections and she felt more people should hear them. "The point was to get people to share their music," she says. "It's not a slick DJ thing. It's more like having people over to your apartment and playing cool records for them. I had so many friends who love music, and you'd go to their house and they'd play their records for you, and it was so much fun. I wanted to bring that kind of fun, party atmosphere and put it in a venue." Immediately, she started getting requests from people wanting to share their favorite songs. This month, Dennison is reprising her celebrity DJ night, called the Celebrity Record Hop, Friday nights at Zuzu in Central Square, where she now works.

Geoff Hargadon, who is a money manager by day, has DJ'ed at B-Side several times. He was there at the beginning when the Monday night series started, waiting for his chance to be part of it and to show off some of his music collection (he has about 1,000 records, including many in his current favorite genre, "electro-clash"). "I like to run the gamut of my collection and play at least a few things where people say, 'God, I haven't heard that in years!' Or 'Wow, what the hell is that?' I look at it this way: It's a party for lots of people, no clean-up, great staff, lots of food and cocktails—and all I have to do is get the word out and bring some records. How can you beat that?"

Eavesdrop, at River Gods, is an amateur night for more serious-minded DJs to develop their craft and show off their collections. "Boston, despite its rock devotion, is a pretty open-minded town," says David Day, former general manager at Other Music and now a weekly DJ at River Gods. "Its most attentive music fans buy a little of everything: soul, hip-hop, rock, techno. There's a phrase in the UK that I think applies here, and that's 'Trust the DJ.' Here's someone with a cultured aesthetic, and if you lean back and relax you'll be into what you hear." One of the reasons Eavesdrop brings in lesser-known DJs is that it makes for a wildly diverse evening. "If I wanted to have a huge, throw-down, twist-em-up party, I'd want a bigger pro. But for bars and clubs where there's no dance floor and no inclination for an all-night party, it's more intriguing to dwell on their aesthetic."

Another reason for the amateur DJ trend is a matter of simple economics. Club owners know that a radio DJ will bring in some of his or her listeners, and a music critic will bring co-workers and friends. But the real point, as Dennison says, is that "...it's just fun. You get to laugh at all the errors. There's always record-skipping, cutting things off, all kinds of mechanical errors that people who aren't professionals make. It's more goofy than seeing a club DJ. And people don't have the same expectations. They just expect to be turned on to some new music." iB

MEET THE WORLD-RENOWNED MUSICIANS WHO NOW CALL THIS CITY HOME

On a recent Wednesday night at the Independent, a restaurant and pub in Union Square, roots-rock journeyman Dennis Brennan was enlightening the crowd. Brennan had brought along his usual cast of topflight local players, including bassist Richard Gates and guitarists Duke Levine and Kevin Barry.

It was a happening little scene, even before former J. Geils Band frontman and man-about-town Peter Wolf showed up to sing Buddy Holly's "Oh, Boy!" But how many of the patrons hoisting pints at the Somerville nightspot realized that the slight man in spectacles behind the drums has recorded with stars like Paul McCartney, George Harrison, Elton John, Nick Drake and Brian Eno?

Meet Dave Mattacks, one of several world-class musicians—including saxophonist Steve Lacy, keyboardist-producer Al Kooper, Manhattan Transfer singer Cheryl Bentyne and slide guitarist Dave Tronzo—who have moved to Boston after attaining fame, and who stay largely under the celebrity radar.

"Even when I was playing with Richard Thompson or Jethro Tull or doing sessions with Paul McCartney, I never thought of myself in rock-star terms," says the English-bred musician. Also a former member of the folk-rock group Fairport Convention, Mattacks says he finds rock stars amusing and sees himself as the antithesis of someone like Tommy Lee. "It's all Spinal Tap for me," he says. "I'm down on the ground with the guys." And the gals; one of Mattacks' steady gigs in recent years has been touring and recording with singer-songwriter Mary Chapin Carpenter, which helped propel his relocation from England.

Other reasons for his move, Mattacks says, are his decision to leave Fairport, the predominance of processed rhythm in British pop music and a change in England's social climate. "If you have something going well for you, there tends to be an attitude in England of 'Ohhh, all right for you then,'" he says. "There's an element of the class system, like [you're] rising above your station in life."

Mattacks came to Massachusetts after striking up friendships with people like Levine, producer Tom Dube and composer Mason Daring, who convinced him to move to Marblehead three years ago.

"I've always liked New England," says 55-year-old Mattacks, who has an extensive array of drums and cymbals in his basement, as well as a record collection inherited from the late Gus Dudgeon, a close friend and famed producer (Elton John, David Bowie). "One of the appealing things about Boston was I liked the climate and the feel of the place."

For Steve Lacy, one of the greatest soprano saxophonists in jazz history, moving to Boston last August after more than 30 years of living in Europe was like coming home. A New Yorker by birth, Lacy lived in Boston in the early 1950s and studied music theory at Schillinger House, which later became Berklee College of Music.

"Boston is wonderful because it's a center of learning in all different fields—that's important to me," says 69-year-old Lacy. He now teaches at the New England Conservatory and lives in a Brookline house that overlooks part of the Emerald Necklace. "Boston's a brainy joint. It's very green and leafy, but it's got a mind. If you want to go to New York, it's quite simple. That's part of the attraction too. But New York is so noisy that it would drive me crazy after a while."

"It was time to leave Paris; that was clear," says Lacy, who made the move with his wife, Irene Aebi, his frequent collaborator as a vocalist. "We were working more and more in America, and work was drying up in France."

The opposite was true in the 1960s. "It was hard in New York because the music we were doing was very underground," Lacy says. "Jazz was 'in' in Paris. At that time, the free-jazz players were all over Paris, and people real appreciated that kind of music. So we were able to fit with all the other players, and there was a scene goi on." By that time, Lacy had already established himself an innovator on soprano sax—the straight horn made f mous by Sidney Bechet—with pianists Cecil Taylor ar Thelonious Monk. "Nobody played soprano in tho days," he says.

In fact, it was Lacy who inspired John Coltrane to pi up the soprano sax. "I had been playing it for 10 years befo Coltrane started playing it," Lacy says. "He asked me wh key it was in, and I told him, and he said, 'Oh wow, E fla That makes it easy to go from the tenor to the soprano. S he did. A few weeks later, he was already playing it."

Since moving to Boston, Lacy has performed in se tings ranging from a program with the Jazz Composers A liance Orchestra to duets with pianist and NEC associa Danilo Perez. He hopes to stage longer, theatrical piec like his opera The Cry, but Lacy is also keeping busy wit teaching at the NEC. "The school gives me a base," h says. "We never had that before. We were just out there can try so many different things with my students. Thin that we did 20 or 30 years ago in Europe, the studen latch onto them immediately."

Studio legend Al Kooper also felt the lure of educatio when he moved from Nashville to take a Berklee teach ing position in 1997. "In my childhood, I needed a scho like that," he says, "and there was none."

Kooper has done quite well nonetheless. Not only d he create the signature organ part on Bob Dylan's "Like Rolling Stone," launch the horn-driven Blood, Sweat Tears, and discover Lynyrd Skynyrd (producing th Southern rockers' first three albums), but he also co-wro the '60s hit "This Diamond Ring." "It was an R&B son and it turned into a milkshake," Kooper says of Ga Lewis & the Playboys' syrupy version of the tune.

In 2000, Kooper quit his Berklee job after sufferi from a degenerative condition that deprived him two-thirds of his sight. That setback was followed b the successful removal of a brain tumor. "I can't drive anymore, but that's a blessing in Boston," says Kooper, who taught classes in record production and songwriting, including the history as well as the mechanics of both crafts.

"It's really important for a record producer to understand the history," he says. "My knowledge of history helped to put Lynyrd Skynyrd across. I was already looking for a rock 'n' roll band like that because of the state of radio."

Kooper has been busy in the studio again in New York. He recently remastered two classic 1968 sets with blues guitarist Mike Bloomfield (including an expanded version of Super Session with Stephen Stills) in Surround Sound 5.1, a new audio format that Kooper loves. And he just finished touring Japan for the first time since the 1970s.

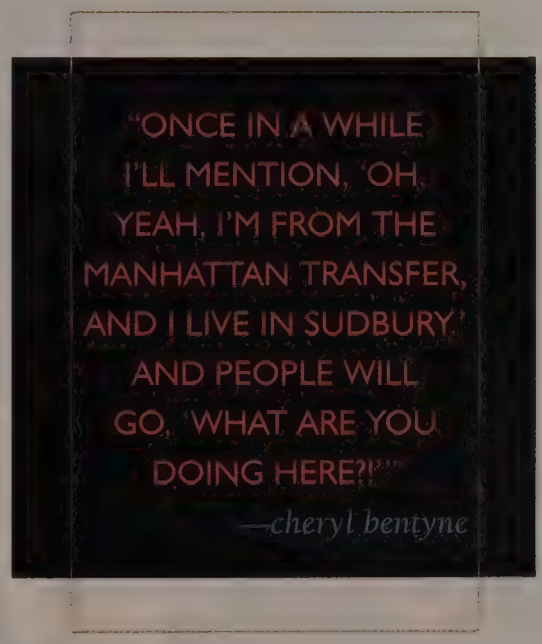
Even without the Berklee job, 59-year-old Kooper is not about to abandon his Somerville digs. "I was sort of seduced by Harvard Square, and when I got here, I didn't go to Harvard Square much," he says. "I'm about as reclusive as one can be. My house is nice, and that's what matters to me."

Finding a nice home was an attraction for Manhattan Transfer transplant Cheryl Bentyne—as was escaping Los Angeles after the 1994 earthquake—when she settled into an old house in Sudbury with her husband, keyboardist Corey Allen, a Maine native who had previously taught at Berklee.

"We were going to have a baby, and we didn't want to raise her in L.A.," says 49-year-old Bentyne. Bandmate Janis Siegel understood. "The minute I left the West Coast, Janis was right behind me and moved back to Manhattan," Bentyne says of her female comrade in the Grammy-winning Transfer, the vocal-jazz quartet that has pioneered the form over the past 30 years. "So the girls are the smart ones, and the guys are still West Coasters."

"I've just been keeping very low-key here," she says. "Once in a while, I'll mention, 'Oh yeah, I'm from the Manhattan Transfer, and I live in Sudbury.' And people will go, 'What are you doing here?!'"

Shortly after arriving in Massachusetts, Bentyne and Allen presented a master class at Berklee, and both were invited back to teach. But while he settled into the groove of teaching again, Bentyne didn't take to it. "I had enough to give for a couple semesters in terms of my experience," she says. "I'm not real teacher material in the basic sense, so I left. I'm trying to work on my solo career now, and can't come and go. It's too hard for the students and too hard for me. But I did enjoy it."



Dave Tronzo, on the other hand, says that teaching at Berklee "has refocused my work life"—even though classes were the last thing on his mind when the slide guitarist and his wife moved to southern New Hampshire in late 2001.

As in Bentyne's case, Tronzo's relocation was partly propelled by a disaster. "September 11 happened, and it was a big deal; it involved a lot of people we knew, and we lost a lot of friends," says the 44-year-old musician. A day after the disaster, Tronzo's mother suffered a massive heart attack, but due to the breakdown in New York's phone service, he didn't find out about her condition for a week.

Thankfully, his mother recovered, and Tronzo followed her to New England, where she resettled in Maine to be near Tronzo's brother. "I lived in New York for 22 years and felt like I didn't have it in me to go through another city crisis," he says. Tronzo got back to playing, and teaching nontraditional slide guitar techniques at Berklee.

"You have to think way outside the box," Tronzo says of the odd style he has brought to artists such as the Lounge Lizards, John Hiatt, Spanish Fly and the Jazz Passengers. "Slide guitar is an undeveloped technique, and that's not to say that the music being made with it in the traditional sense is lacking." In contrast to the traditional style, in which the guitarist presses a metal or glass "slide" against the strings, Tronzo uses objects like plastic cups, cigar holders, a coffee can (which generates its own reverb) and a cheese grater. "If you apply them in a way that suggests another instrument, people go, 'Wow, that sounds like an oud.' And if you apply it in a way that they don't recognize, all of a sudden you've got this new sound."

"I thought at this point, a lot of young players would be familiar with this [technique], but everybody looks at it like they did 20 years ago," says Tronzo, who was once named one of the top 10 guitarists in jazz by Musician magazine. He does note, however, that one student has arranged a Debussy flute sonata for bottleneck slide.

Tronzo, who plays with the experimental collective Club d'Elf and will join the group for a July 2 date at the Museum of Fine Arts with organist John Medeski, makes this comparison between Boston and his former home base: "Boston and New York are very similar. They both have an incredible, growing, evolving pool of musicians who have a lot of variety, are highly skilled and tend to be very adventurous." IB

VARIATIONS ON A theme

GOT A HANKERING FOR BLUES, COUNTRY, ROCKABILLY, OR SINATRA? LOCAL BARS HAVE AN IMMERSION PROGRAM FOR YOU.

BY CAITLIN O'NEIL

Hillbilly night at Johnny D's

If you had a theme song, what would it be? Depending on the day, it could be an inspirational anthem like the tune from Rocky, or a bluesy little number that skips along with quiet confidence. At local bars you can pick a genre to suit your mood any night of the week. Theme nights are gaining momentum around town, setting the tone for the evening with blues, bluegrass, rockabilly, Sinatra songs or avant-garde jazz. Here are some of the best places to wet your whistle as you listen to the music.

HILLBILLY NIGHT AT JOHNNY D'S

While Johnny D's might not be Tootsie's Orchid Lounge, the famed Nashville dive where country stars are born, it has been the home of Hillbilly Night every Monday for the past year. A mere $5 gets you an earful of local country, Western swing, and bluegrass bands like the Bagboys and Rust Farm, as well as national acts like fiddler James Leva. The first Monday of the month is reserved for Western swing dancing to the strains of the Coachmen.

"A few years ago, my wife and I went to a Ralph Stanley concert attended by thousands of people," says August Watters, who runs Hillbilly Night with his wife, Nancy Harrowitz. "We thought there were not many opportunities to hear this kind of live music in Boston. So we approached Johnny D's."

They named the event after Boston's fabled rockabilly venue, the Hillbilly Ranch in Park Square, and the long-running radio show Hillbilly at Harvard. "A lot of people see the sign and wander in," says Watters. "They're always pleasantly surprised. It's more of a listening scene than a bar scene."

Watters and Harrowitz's band, Almost Gone, kicks off each Hillbilly Night at 8 pm. The featured band follows at 9 pm. The jangling guitar and driving beats are less Hee-Haw than "yee-haw!" and soon the eclectic crowd sitting back on its heels is kicking them up instead.

17 Holland St., Somerville, 617-776-9667.

ROCKABILLY NIGHT AT THE JEANIE JOHNSTON PUB

Admit it: When you think "Southern," you think south of the Mason-Dixon Line, not south of the Charles River. But with that train of thought, you're bound to miss out on the rockabilly revival that heats up the Jeanie Johnston Pub in Jamaica Plain on Friday nights.

Rockabilly used to be a JP staple, with groups like Little Memphis playing the Brendan Behan and weekly events at the Midway Café and the Milky Way Lounge. Jason McIsaac, booking manager at the Jeanie Johnston, has revived the tradition with the Crank-Tones and the Coachmen—both side projects of the Western-swing band the Spurs—playing on alternating Fridays at 10 pm.

"The Coachmen play rockabilly," says Johnny Sciascia, the only musician in all three bands, "and the Crank-Tones are more straight-ahead '50s-style rock 'n' roll." Both bands sing honky-tonk songs about "trucking, drinking and women." What could be better after a long workweek? Bottles of Pabst Blue Ribbon are $2.50, and chicken wings are a quarter each while they last.

"It's great to come out and hear local live music," says James Ash of Brighton, who enjoys the music regularly with a large group of friends. "And it's nice that you can still talk too."

The bar has the feel of an upscale frat house, with a central wrap-ound bar, Irish photos and sports memorabilia on the exposed ick walls, and TVs tuned to sports. The stage is tucked into a cor-r, giving the room a laid-back country vibe while the bands play. "We used to be empty on Fridays," says co-owner Hank Kirch-r. "But now the crowds have found their way."

NATRA SUNDAYS AT LUCKY'S LOUNGE

the remake of Ocean's Eleven didn't give you a thirst for Rat ack–era entertainment, let Lucky's Lounge take you back with natra Sundays.

With Lady Luck martinis in the shaker, Italian specials from the tchen and crooners belting tunes like "All of You" and "The Way ou Look Tonight" to the live accompaniment of the Al Vega Trio, won't be long before you'll feel the spirit of the Chairman.

The series began as an annual tribute to Frank Sinatra on the niversary of his death. The event proved so popular that last ar it became a weekly series. "The crowd doubled after six onths," says manager Bill Costa. "To get prime seating now, ou need to get here by 7 pm."

Bill and Rene Oranburg of Boston and Alan Stone of Chestnut ill arrive in time to snag a prime table in the lounge and enjoy nner before the music begins. "It's usually five deep in here," ys Rene, who adds that the bar fills up with a mixed crowd of ose who grew up with the Rat Pack and young hipsters who like e club's retro feel.

"I never thought I'd see people of different ages hanging out Lucky's on a Sunday night," says Matt Kojalo of Brookline. t's great."

Located in a warehouse basement, Lucky's has got the atmosphere of a Prohibition speakeasy and seems just right for a Sunday-night outing. Low light, leather booths and plenty of gilt-framed photos of Old Blue Eyes complete the secret-clubhouse effect. Mark Mahar sings weekly, often joined by Alex MacDougall as well as regulars and guests who step up to the mike and live out their Sinatra dreams.

"The music is as smooth as the martinis," says Maryanne Spillane of South Boston. "They both make me dizzy."

THE SUBCONSCIOUS CAFÉ AT ZEITGEIST GALLERY

The Zeitgeist Gallery in Inman Square isn't afraid to take chances. A case in point: the Subconscious Café, the avant-garde music night that takes place on the first and third Saturday of each month. "People come to hear something you can't hear anywhere else," says organizer Rob Chalfen. "We create music that's intellectual and challenging."

Chalfen describes the program as "new chamber music," which can encompass elements ranging from world music to modern jazz to 21st-century classical and electronica. The crowd is as eclectic as the music, drawing musicians, music aficionados and those in search of something different.

"We get some students," says Chalfen. "But mostly it's anyone who's tired of the same old rock 'n' roll. It's pretty accessible stuff that incorporates traditional music and then turns it on its head."

At the storefront on Cambridge Street, the vibe is both earnest and anything-goes. This series appeals to people who care about serious music but aren't afraid to try something new. A recent show featured electronic upright bassist John Voigt in a series of improbable duets with musicians playing "prepared" guitars, which ran the gamut from morphed washing machines and vacuum cleaners to traditional guitars played with kitchen utensils and glass bottles.

"I want to be challenging," says Chalfen. When you visit the Subconscious Café, "you know that's what you're going to get." Doors open at 9 pm and the music starts by 9:30. Shows are $10.
1353 Cambridge St., Cambridge, 617-876-6060.

BLUE MONDAYS AT THE ABBEY LOUNGE

If the beginning of another workweek gives you the blues, then amble over to the Abbey Lounge to drown your sorrows in Pabst Blue Ribbon and soak your spirit in the appropriate music.

When J. Grimaldi, who tends the bar and books bands for the Abbey, was looking for a blues band to play on Monday nights, he called up his cohorts from his band, Schnockered, cousins Eric and Ed Anderson, to fill the bill. Since January, the Double D Blues Band has taken the stage with Eric on guitar; Ed on drums; Eric's dad, Steve, on bass; Ed's dad, Fred, singing; and Fred and Steve's cousin, George Hamilton, on piano.

"It's a family thing," says Eric Anderson. "All of us have played in bands before but never together." The dads pick the songs, a mix of classic blues and modern favorites, including "It's a Mean Old World," "Mustang Sally," and "Shake It Up and Go." Musicians are welcome to join the jam, which runs from 8 to 11 pm.

"We end early for people who have to get up early on Tuesdays," says Anderson. The band is among them; they all work day jobs ranging from mechanical engineer to pilot to Internet executive.

Despite free hot wings, the mismatched tables and chairs sat mostly empty on a recent Monday night. The lonely sound of cars passing in the rain mingled with the brooding blues, creating the perfect place to forget your troubles. If you don't like Mondays, a few trips to the Abbey might change your mind. iB

After a long winter and almost no spring at all, the sun is finally making a comeback, and warming temps are inspiring Bostonians to jump back into summer routines—outdoor sports, patio dining and lounging on the Common, to name a few. So what does one wear to be casually comfortable in warm weather but remain stylish? This summer's laid-back looks are a throwback to the '70s. They incorporate satin bomber jackets, as well as short shorts and skirts with details like piping and lace accents. Mesh tanks and hoodies layer over your skimpiest tops to add texture and edge. The biggest casual trend, however, is the match set. Matching tops and bottoms, like the ones you had when you were a child, are now hip again. Stick to solid colors to keep the look sophisticated and grown-up.

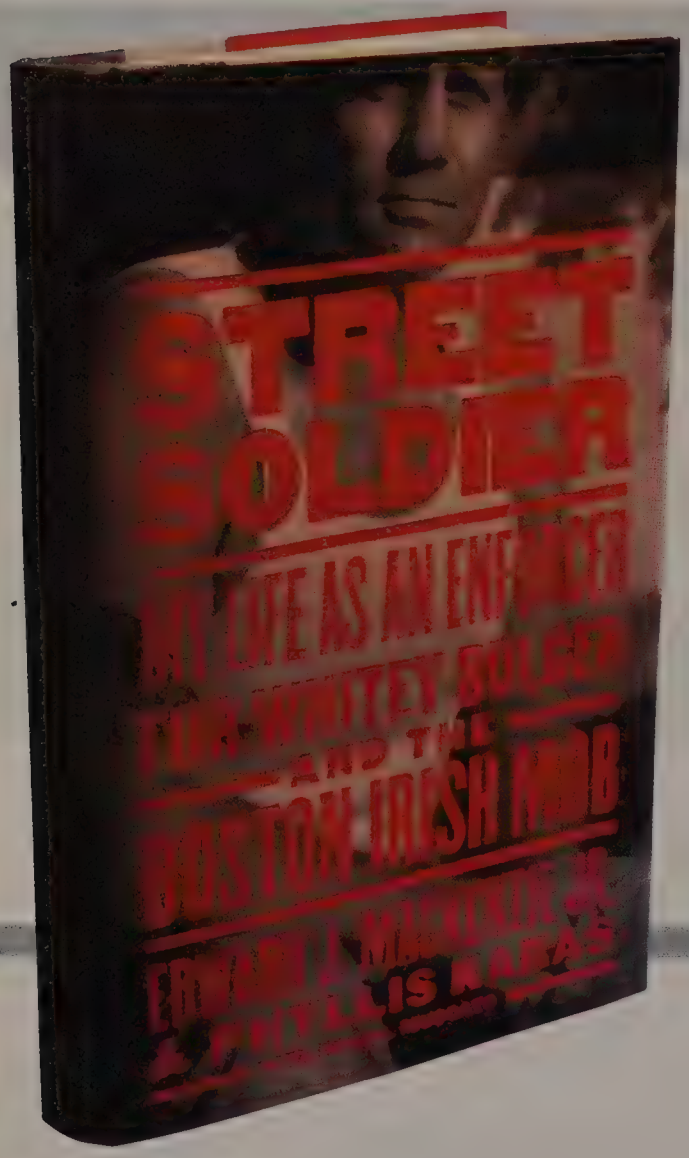
MOPSY

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



IN OUR OWN BULGER BACKYARD

Street Soldier: My Life as an Enforcer for Whitey Bulger and the Boston Irish Mob*, by Edward J. MacKenzie Jr. and Phyllis Karas, tells of a life of crime in South Boston.

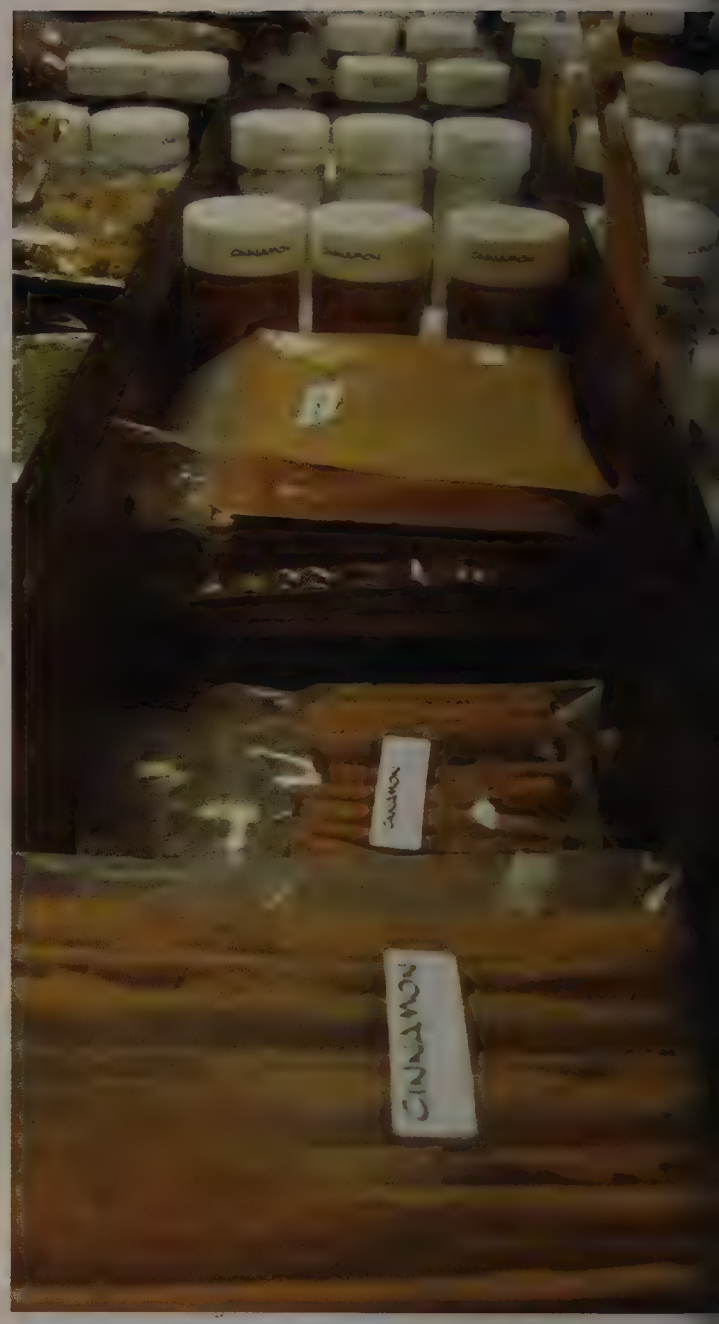
From the age of 4, when he was placed in foster care, Edward MacKenzie was on the road to becoming the original tough survivor out of Southie. Violently abused as a child, he grew into a life of astonishing violence, and that was even before he met the psychopathic Whitey Bulger, he of the ice-blue eyes, "with that sick grin, half Satan and half big cat." MacKenzie was jailed at a young age but was sprung quickly with help from a lawyer. Soon, Bulger spotted his "talent"—MacKenzie was a Golden Gloves and kickboxing champion—and employed him to deliver drugs and break bones. Scenes of testosterone-laden, action-movie energy involving near-murderous torture and kinky sex abound in the book, which is written in a gritty style that is compelling, despite the disturbing content. But MacKenzie's strutting—as he fathers six children in various messy unions, gets custody and then graduates from the University of Massachusetts—gradually becomes a kind of sweetly bemused penitence and at least a partial desire to shield his daughters from people like himself and the world he helped blacken alongside Whitey.

ENTICING SPICE

Christina's Spice & Specialty Foods, at 1261 Cambridge Street, Cambridge, sells spices and rices that are great for assembling in gift baskets. Call 617-492-7021.

Bring your cookbooks, preferably exotic, so you can move upstream from the spices and other tasty adornments here to the dishes they'll inspire. Herbs and spices fill the central racks, in powders, leaves, or in crunchable whole form, like nutmegs. There's chewy smoked red wolf berry, and sumac, which adds a sour flavor to Middle Eastern dishes. Nigella, a fine black oniony spice, makes you want to sleuth out its interesting uses, and then there's the luscious cardomom-like grains of paradise. Just eyeing that bag of wasabi mustard makes your taste buds sting and sing; the owner recommends mixing it with cream, to dribble atop salmon. The spicidacious provenances include the Caribbean, Ethiopia, Jamaica and Latin locales. There are also lots of American grains—black and white quinoa, buckwheat, bulgur, kasha, and bags of fat corn in white, yellow and lavender blue. Also pretty are the fine, dehydrated vegetable powders—spinach, pumpkin, beet—to add un-gooey flavor to pasta or risotto. Forty-two teas make for a garden of soothing, poetic names: hibiscus, ginger peach, elderflower. And chilis hang abundantly from the ceiling, chandeliers of heat.



GET OUT OF THE FOG, WITH TERRY

Rent a Captain, in the person of Terry Sheehan, helps powerboat owners run and understand their boats or does it for them. Sheehan also transports boats, charging $50 per hour or $350 per day, plus expenses. Call 617-512-6285 or visit www.rentacaptain.com.

Let's say you've just acquired the thrilling zoom-zoom of a new power boat. But now let's admit something quietly, under the roar of the motor. You don't really know how to run the thing, or much about docking, let alone charting and plotting a course. You certainly couldn't get home should a sudden fog obscure your path. Terry Sheehan, who has worked on boats in Boston Harbor for the past 15 years and has a U.S. Coast Guard Captain's License, can show you the salty ropes. He'll help you plot your course before you leave and show you the smooth and rough spots along your sailing route. Because technology can lose its magnificence unexpectedly, Sheehan will also teach you the ancient navigational technique of dead reckoning to discover exactly where you are. Or, if you want him to simply be the captain while you acquatically party or whale-watch, the affable Sheehan can do that. Chauffeuring boats to other ports is yet another service.

SOUTHIE POLISH

Café Polonia's homestyle Polish cuisine surprises and delights with delicate flavors and nuances

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Dinner at Café Polonia made me think of Christmas trees and snowflakes, even though it was the end of May. It wasn't just because of Boston's wintry weather this spring; instead, Café Polonia evoked fond memories of Christmas Eve dinner at my Aunt Vic's. Aunt Vic and my father were Poles who came to this country in the decade before the first World War. My paternal grandparents brought to New England the rich gastronomic traditions of middle Europe: hearty cuisine, but with flavors and nuances that can surprise and delight. Garlic and dill feature prominently in Polish cooking, but more important than herbs are the flavors provided by principal ingredients like cabbage, pork, mushrooms and onions.

Café Polonia's menu touches all the bases. It begins with a selection of kanapki, or sandwiches, all served with potato chips. The grilled kielbasa sub ($5), a thick sandwich on a hard-crusted roll, was stuffed with juicy and flavorful grilled kielbasa, caramelized onions, and sauerkraut. Authentic Polish kielbasa like that served at Café Polonia is a pork product, sometimes combined with veal or beef—a true Pole would shudder at the idea of turkey or all-beef kielbasa—and always infused with garlic, which distinguishes it from the Lithuanian kielbasa, from Poland's Baltic neighbor to the north.

Café Polonia offers an array of traditional dishes, including pierogis ($6), cabbage stew ($7), stuffed cabbage, or golabki ($7), and potato pancakes ($7). Each one we tried seemed better than the last. Pierogis, medium-sized, crescent-shaped raviolis filled with meat or cabbage and mushroom or with potatoes and cheese, came seven or eight to the order. While one can order an assortment of all three fillings, my dining companions preferred to stick with their favorite, the cheese and potato. For me, the more adventurous cabbage and mushroom beckoned. Whatever their filling, the pierogis were boiled and then sautéed lightly in butter and bacon fat and garnished with flavorful, pleasantly salty morsels of bacon—this is not a restaurant for the cardiologically challenged.

Golabki (pronounced go-wump-key) consisted of whole cabbage leaves wrapped around a moist, savory stuffing of rice and ground pork, dressed with a mild tomato sauce. The tender cabbage and delectable stuffing made a splendid, satisfying ensemble. Vigos staropolski, cabbage stew ($7), was Café Polonia's answer to Alsacien choucroute, which in other venues would be known as sauerkraut. The cabbage's mellow sweetness was made robust by a liberal studding with morsels of kielbasa. Cabbage—known to most Americans only in its coleslaw embodiment—may be one of the most underrated of foodstuffs. The golabki and bigos staropolski of Café Polonia—like the choucroute of Brasserie Jo—could put this vegetable on the map.

Last among the traditional dishes we sampled were the potato pancakes ($7). Variations of this hearty dish range from roesti potatoes in Switzerland to the crisp, almost deep-fried latkes served by Jewish Americans at Hanukkah. Café Polonia's potato pancakes, five to an order, were substantial in size, fried to a dark-brown turn and garnished with a choice of sour cream or mushroom sauce.

The Polish plate ($8) provides a short cut to attacking the café's traditional dishes. Indeed, with its large golabki, three pierogis, substantial cylinder of kielbasa and generous mound of cabbage stew, the Polish plate could serve as an entire dinner, making it one of Boston's premier dining values.

The traditional Polish dishes at Café Polonia provide sufficient reason to journey to this corner of Boston, but its culinary delights do not stop there. Every day of the week, like a French bistro, Café Polonia offers different dinner selections including a choice of soups and main courses. On Wednesday, the cream of mushroom soup ($3) beckoned, with its light-bodied but intensely flavored broth redolent of mushrooms, carrots, onions and herbs, including dill and bay. The Wednesday main course offering of klopsy, Polish-style meatballs ($7), yielded one gargantuan meatball, a moist and flavorful combination of pork and veal with the shape—and almost the size—of a dirigible. A special one evening, a thick boneless pork chop ($7), turned out tender and juicy, thanks to its light breading and quick sauté, like a proper schnitzel. The meatball

The Polish plate comes with pierogis, grilled Polish sausage, stuffed cabbage, cabbage stew and bread.

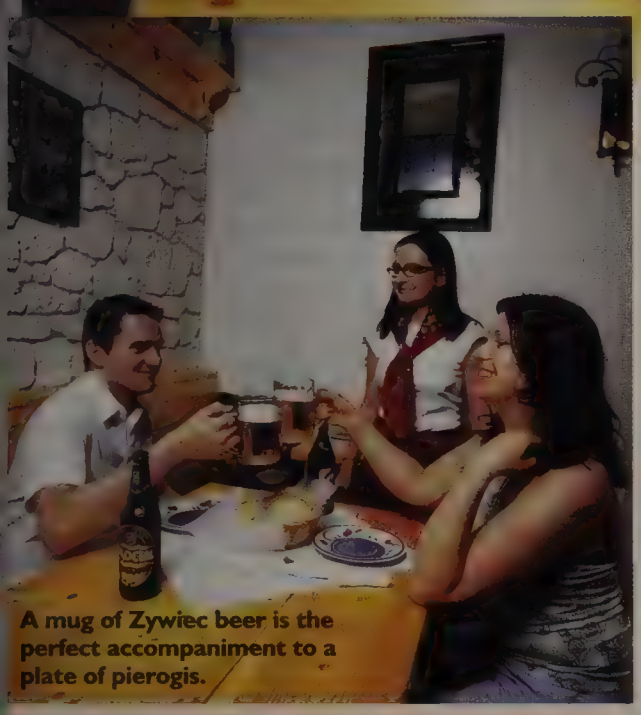
Chef Tery Barsekovsky prepares authentic Polish cuisine.



A mug of Zywiec beer is the perfect accompaniment to a plate of pierogis.

Polish crepes are filled with fruit and topped with whipped cream.

While desserts were offered at Café Polonia, they seemed beside the point after the substantial and satisfying courses that preceded them. On the other hand, a 16-ounce bottle of Zywiec, a strong (5.7 percent alcohol) imported Polish beer ($4), hit the spot. Pleasantly bitter, with aromatic hops, it made a fitting accompaniment to the food. Non-beer drinkers can choose from a short wine list.

Café Polonia's satisfying and well-prepared food is served in a marvelous, impeccably neat and clean environment—evoking further memories of my Aunt Vic. Its small dining room, with room for only 30 patrons, occupies the ground floor of a triple-decker and is appointed in blond pine paneling below the wainscoting and white stone above. Massive wooden beams traverse its ceiling, and shelves high on each wall are lined with large wooden figurines. A colorful Polish jacket hangs on one wall and a mirror on another, while purple draperies frame the sparkling plate-glass window in front. Heavy handmade tables and chairs provide the furnishings.

shared its plate with a mountain of cheesy pasta, while the chop was accompanied by mashed potatoes sprinkled with dill. Both of these meat offerings came with a refreshing garnish of grated beets, grated carrots, and a lettuce-and-cucumber salad.

Café Polonia is an engaging addition to the ethnic mosaic that is Boston. While cabbage stew, kielbasa, golabki and pierogi may not displace corned beef and cabbage as the signature dish of South Boston, they are serious contenders.

What better way to celebrate 25 years as the South End's premiere restaurant than with a gift for our patrons?

Summer Shorts

New chefs!...New deals!...New blood!

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

If you're sulking because you'll be stuck in the city this summer instead of soaking up sun and sand at the beach, get over it now. There's plenty to check out at local restaurants, from new chefs and new menus to some special deals spurred both by the economy and by occasion for celebration.

First, new chefs: Benjamin Knack, who began the Boston portion of his culinary career three years ago working with Frank McClelland at L'Espalier and later joined Beacon Hill Bistro as pastry chef, has been promoted to executive chef at BHB. His menu, which varies from week to week, includes such dishes as spring osso buco with herb spaetzle and orange gremolata. In Cambridge, Daniel Pogue is the new executive chef at Temple Bar in Harvard Square. A New Orleans native, Pogue was formerly a Navy chef aboard a submarine during Operation Desert Storm and later served as executive chef at an upscale Chicago steakhouse. So don't expect MREs (meals ready to eat); instead, try giant sea scallops seared in saffron oil with frisee and raspberries.

Daniel Pogue is the new executive chef at Temple Bar in Harvard Square.

SECOND COURSE

Hot deals: Icarus, the South End's first fine-dining restaurant, is celebrating its 25th anniversary this summer, but you get the gift. For the first 25 nights in July, Icarus will offer a $25 prix fixe menu, featuring a varying roster of the most popular dishes of the '70s, '80s, '90s and the present. But wait, there's more: several especially popular summer wines will be priced at $25 per bottle during the same period. Another great wine deal is offered at Bomboa, which is slashing its wine list prices by 50 percent every Monday night throughout the summer.

Good news & bad news: After more than nine years as a Caribbean dining and entertainment fixture in Cambridge's Central Square, Rhythm & Spice has closed. A recorded message informs callers that the restaurant "hopes to resume catering in a new location" soon. Meanwhile, on the bright-and-early side of the day in that same Cambridge neighborhood, the Miracle of Science Bar & Grill is now serving a breakfast menu. Starting at 7 am (it's a miracle if you're up and dressed that early!), and until 11 am, you can wake up to sourdough French toast, steak and eggs, or imported French yogurt, among other moderately priced ($4-$7) breakfast fare.

Calling single red-blooded Americans and blue-blooded Bostonians: What's thicker than water, rarest in summer, and the focus of an event where you can both demonstrate your good citizenship and meet someone who's just your "type"? Find out at the Hyatt Regency Cambridge on July 2, when the American Red Cross and The Post Club jointly sponsor a singles blood drive that offers more than the usual juice and cookies. Hold out your arm, then reach for a free non-alcoholic refresher such as a "pale Bloody Mary" or "fainting Cosmo." Yes, it sounds bizarre—can you imagine a less-enticing come-on than "Lie down, relax, it'll be over in a minute"?—but you never know. For an appointment, call 617-441-6450.

If you want a real drink, check out the fried martini at Rustic Kitchen. Remember when Bill Bradley was chef at Bricco, and one of his most popular tapas was anchovy-stuffed deep-fried olives? Those same olives now garnish the fried martini, thankfully above gin level to keep their crunch. And if you're thirsty on a sunny Sunday, take a drive to Buzzards Bay Brewing in Westport, where you can now buy fresh, locally made beer by the case from 11 am to 5 pm...if you're old enough, of course. WINE

Pleasures of Pinot

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

A retailer recently told me his store sells more pinot grigio than chardonnay. It was an astounding assertion and I wasn't sure how to take it, but he was quite serious. The grape is surging in popularity. From virtual anonymity it's leapfrogged past sauvignon blanc to the no. 2 ranking on the white wine hit parade in this country. It's now the top category of imported wine, but more popular than chardonnay? When I asked him whether this sudden fame has translated into higher sales for Oregon or Alsatian pinot gris, two decidedly more upscale versions of the typically light and eminently quaffable Italian pinot grigio, he said he felt certain that it didn't. An informal survey of other stores and restaurants suggests that this is substantially the same story elsewhere as well.

The pinot gris grape is a chameleon, taking on characteristics that depend on where and how it's grown and how the juice is made into wine. Even in Italy there are several different versions. The lightest and easiest-drinking of the wines—the kind found in magnum jugs in stores all over the world nowadays—usually hails from the plains of the Veneto region. It's inexpensive and forms the bulk of the import volume. Serve it cold on the deck or patio. More flavorful pinot grigio is to be found in the adjacent region of Trentino Alto Adige, a hilly zone whose poor soils and higher-elevation vineyards usually impart more texture, body and spice. These are outstanding aperitif wines, but also work nicely with cold seafood salads and simply prepared fish. Generally the finest and the most impressively perfumed wines come from Friuli, on Italy's northeastern border, adjacent to Yugoslavia. Within Friuli two zones, Collio and Colli Orientali del Friuli, are the most prestigious. Their producers are usually artisans who make lavishly textured apple- and peach-scented pinot grigio with lingering mineral flavors that are outstanding foils for rich seafood dishes. Some of these wines are finished in oak barrels, but the predominant practice throughout Italy is to avoid wood treatment.

All of these wines have been selling at a prolific pace in the last few years, even in the midst of a general economic slump and a weakening dollar. The top wines of Friuli are not inexpensive (expect to pay $20 and up in a store), but their brilliance more than justifies an extra premium and they are usually snapped up quickly. Restaurants that once featured one or perhaps two pinot grigios now are becoming more aware of the market for these higher-priced wines and stocking a broader selection. But where are the pinot gris (the original French name of the grape and the version used most commonly outside of Italy) wines other than those produced in Italy? Virtually invisible. But it stands to reason that if the grape is such a crowd pleaser, it can perform well elsewhere as well.

One of the reasons that Oregon pinot gris is not better known is that most of it remains in the Pacific Northwest. It's practically mandatory in Portland, Oregon, to drink one of the local pinot gris–based wines if you're eating grilled salmon. Even though Oregon's climate is cooler than most of the regions of Italy where pinot grigio is produced, the majority of the Northwest pinot gris I've tasted are riper, more floral and spicier, with a rounder mouth feel. It's not unusual to barrel-age the wines, although care must be taken not to over-oak them because the subtly evocative pinot gris flavors can easily be overwhelmed with the toasty scents and tannins of new barrels. Used judiciously, however, wood aging can enhance creaminess and texture. This is Oregon's flagship white, having overtaken Chardonnay some time ago as the state's category leader. To differentiate the wines from the Italian version, it's illegal to put the name "pinot grigio" on the label. At one point I could recommend all of the wines with confidence, but a disturbing trend I've noticed lately is that some Oregon producers are allowing their wines to veer over the edge of perception in terms of residual sugar, with their fruit flavors somewhat buried under the syrupy sweetness.

Alsace is the other region with a long history of quality pinot gris, although here the name on the label is likely to ready "Tokay pinot gris" (after the traditional name for the wine in the region, "Tokay d'Alsace," which is no longer used). The best of these wines take the floral, tropical fruit–scented side of the grape's potential to an extreme. Alsace pinot gris is generally much spicier and more unctuous, with lower acidity and fuller body than other versions. There are examples that are almost Gewurztraminer-like in their aromas and exotically accented flavors. In the hands of many producers there is a smoky, tropical fruit component, dry but honey-like, that fits beautifully with Asian fare and with salty dishes like baked ham. People who have never tried a Tokay pinot gris are often shocked that wines with this much personality are made with the same grape that produces light Italian pinot grigio. Along with the Oregon examples they present an outstanding opportunity to branch out beyond the comfort zone into a whole new world of flavor excitement. ■

CityScope: Fest for the Fourth

It's the one time of year when We the People of Boston are inspired to get out there and appreciate all of our city's historic offerings. (You mean there's a Sam Adams statue, too?) Boston's annual six-day-long Fourth of July festival showcases the city's colonial and maritime heritage with heaps of reenactments, concerts, historical tours—more than 200 events all together, concentrated in the downtown and waterfront areas. The biggest crowd pleasers are at City Hall Plaza, including a series of free concerts (beginning with reggae/ska kings the Allstonians). There's also Children's Day at the Plaza July 2, and our favorite, Chowderfest, July 6. The Harborfest Web site has a complete listing of events. (617-227-1528). www.bostonharborfest.com.

Books & Poetry: Dipsomaniacs' Delight

Writers with Drinks, Other magazine's series that pairs—you guessed it—writers and alcohol—is having two sessions this summer at the Lizard Lounge. Luckily, the first one takes place on a Friday night, because you may need the weekend to recover. (These events are something that Charles Bukowski would have liked, filled with equal parts intellectual stimulation and mind-numbing cocktails.) The participants for this round include fantasy author Delia Sherman, who shares her tales about absinthe-drinking lesbian vampire prostitutes; literary maven Charlie Anders (Other magazine), who tells tales of urban isolation and leg warmers; comedian Brent Sverdloff of Cambridge's Comedy Studio (right); and poet Shantanette Patrice, who shows off her slam style poetry. Political journalist Dan Kennedy also chimes in with his nonfiction, and steamy performance artist Amatul Hannan takes the stage as Ms. Homeland USA. Anders emcees. 1667 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-547-0759). 7-9 pm. $3-$5 (pay what you can).

THROUGH AUG. 31

Performing Arts: Midsummer Madness

Not many theaters allow you to recline in a lawn chair and gulp a beer as you watch a Shakespearean drama unfold. That's why we should all show our support for the Publick Theatre—which has survived hurricane damage, electrical fires and vandalism since its founding in 1959—by heading out to catch its first show of the season, A Midsummer Night's Dream. (This summer's other production, Twelfth Night, opens July 10.) The outdoor theater's setting—right on the Charles River—is magnificent, and at sunset, there's no better place to see this comedy about four lovers, a fairy queen and an ass. Christian Herter Riverside Park, 1175A Soldiers Field Road, Brighton (617-782-5425). www.publicktheatre.org. Wed., Thu. and Sun., 7:30 pm; Fri. and Sat., 8 pm. $25-$30.

Tastings: They Wear Short Shorts!

It amazes us that on a nightly basis, local chefs prepare gourmet creations within the sweltering confines of crowded kitchens. Just imagine the masterpieces they could whip up if they tossed off their toques and clogs, strapped on a pair of sandals and cooked under starry skies. Well, you can find out at the Chefs in Shorts event June 27 on the roof of the World Trade Center. More than 25 chefs, including Carmen Quagliata of the Vault, Jim Solomon of the Fireplace, Luis Morales of Via Matta, Brian Reimer of Radius, Jeremy Sewall of Great Bay and Tom Berry of Bambara, will dish out samples of such delicacies as grilled marinated figs with mascarpone cheese or grilled molasses-and-balsamic-vinegar-marinated pork tenderloin. Proceeds benefit the Anthony Spinazzola Foundation, which provides relief for the hungry and homeless through grants to local agencies. World Trade Center East, 2 Seaport Lane, Boston (617-385-4000). www.seaporthotel.com. 7-9:30 pm. $55.

NOW SHOWING

Movies: Reloaded and Revamped

Die-hard fans of the futuristic fantasy The Matrix and its sequel, The Matrix Reloaded, have a bigger, better experience in store for them: a large-format version of the second film that promises to bowl them over with image and sound. Fans can see The Matrix Reloaded on New England's largest movie screen, the IMAX at the New England Aquarium, for evening shows throughout the summer. The new version comes with top-of-the-line technical touches, like digital remastering and enhanced sound. Warner Brothers thought this version was so different that they authorized a new name for the release, *The Matrix Reloaded: The IMAX Experience. Dawn of the Dread

28 Days Later is a grim reaper of sci-fi thrills

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The apocalypse will not be televised. At least that's how it goes in 28 Days Later, a tense, creepy and ultimately rather traditional sci-fi/action movie from Trainspotting director Danny Boyle. It starts with a group of English animal-rights activists breaking into a research laboratory and liberating a roomful of primates that one lab worker warns have been "infected with rage." That sets off a chain reaction of killing. The ticked-off primates bite the humans, infecting them with the rage virus, and these people go off to maim more humans. Bloodlust then triumphs over all, even cable TV, satellite dishes and Rupert Murdoch.

Four weeks later, there is no radio, no TV, no government. There are corpses, debris (London looks like a dirty motel room the morning after), bands of the raving infected and pockets of uninfected people.

In 28 Days Later, a bike messenger is hit by a car and awakens to find the world completely transformed.

That's the new world order into which Jim (Cillian Murphy) comes out of a coma. The Irishman is a bike messenger who had been hit by a car around the same time the trouble began. He awakens in an empty hospital and staggers through empty London streets like the last man on earth in a Twilight Zone episode, in an urban vacuum eerier than the deserted Times Square of Vanilla Sky.

When Jim is set upon by an infected vicar, he's rescued by two other "uninfecteds." But Jim soon learns the ways of the new world when one (Noah Huntley) gets infected and the other, Selena (Naomie Harris), promptly plunges her machete-like knife through him. Tough Selena and shell-shocked Jim eventually meet up with a London cabbie (Brendan Gleeson) and his 14-year-old daughter (Megan Burns), and after hearing a radio broadcast from a group of soldiers outside Manchester, the four head north in search of more survivors.

28 Days Later is not about the end of the world as we know it so much as it's about those survivors trying to carry on. Like Jim, we don't even see the collapse of society; after the primates are let loose, the action jumps over those 28 days of mayhem. Instead, the focus is similar to that of Dawn of the Dead and Day of the Dead, George A. Romero's depictions of the aftermath to the carnage of his landmark zombie picture, Night of the Living Dead. The infected killers of 28 Days Later have the unthinking persistence of Romero's zombies, and their contagious rage spreads through blood, giving the film elements of a vampire movie.

Alex Garland, who wrote the novel that Boyle's The Beach was based on, scripted 28 Days Later. He gives the story a distinctive three-act structure, with an intense opening, a rather idyllic mid-section (when the four uninfecteds get out of London and into the relaxing countryside as they drive north) and a bloody conclusion as the final showdown occurs. The mid-section lets the characters emerge as people the viewer cares about and lets hope seep into the earlier sense of doom, providing emotional dimension that makes the battles that follow all the more dramatic. But Boyle's direction has less in common with The Beach than with the two lean BBC movies he made after that, Strumpet and Vacuuming in the Nude. Like those, 28 Days Later was shot on digital video by Anthony Dod Mantle, and it shares those films' jarring spontaneity at times.

So 28 Days Later doesn't break any new ground, and the climax, which skillfully swerves far from the predictable, contains nagging lapses in logic. But like most well-made sci-fi/horror, the story contains an effective dose of social commentary. The movie's most powerful image may be its first, in the research laboratory, where a fast-cut montage of human violence and strife turns out to be what a strapped-down primate is being forced to watch. Nonstop images of human violence are being used to infect "animals" with rage. As 28 Days Later asks, just who are the animals here? iB

The feisty young woman caught between t cultures—think Double Happiness, Mississi Masala and My Big Fat Greek Wedding—g trotted out yet again in director Gurinder Chadh latest, which can't compare to her Bhaji on Beach but is still involving. Parminder Nagra gi a winning performance as Jess, the Indian-Engl teen with soccer skills and two Sikh parents w won't allow her to pursue such a nontraditio female endeavor. When Jess is recruited to play a local women's team, with the possibility discovery by an American pro team, the scen set for lots of running around behind her paren back and comic mishaps—in fact, an awful lo repetitive running around and mishaps. It's pretty predictable, but Nagra, Anupam Kher the heroine's father) and Keira Knightley (as teammate and sometime rival), as well as Chadh sense of compassion, help dignity fight caricat to a standoff. (At Copley Place, Kendall Squ and suburbs.)

Bruce Almighty ★★
The Majestic was a terrible movie that deserved flop, but it hurts to see Jim Carrey retreat back i physical comedy with this painfully broad mo about a guy who's ticked off about his accursed, lucky life until God (Morgan Freeman) lets h take the world's reins for a week to see if he can any better. Despite a few amusing moments, C rey's latest is as unconvincingly feel-good as Majestic was. The premise is just a clumsy exc for his character to discover, à la Jimmy Stewart It's a Wonderful Life, that he didn't have it so b after all. And don't the Hollywood studios ha anything better for Jennifer Aniston than the g friend role she's stuck with here? (At Boston Co mon, Fenway and suburbs.)

Capturing the Friedmans ★★★★
Has a movie ever plunged you into greater mo ambiguity than Andrew Jarecki's document about the Friedman family of Great Neck, Long land? They splintered apart in the late 198 when father Arnold and youngest son Jesse w accused of molesting Arnold's computer studen On one hand, it's easy to see how the two Fri mans, and Arnold in particular, might be gui He first got into trouble for having child porn, a he confessed to having improper relations w minors at other times in his life. On the ot hand, the police's investigation and the testim that investigators got from the kids are both w suspect. It's impossible to believe the Friedm are totally in the wrong, or totally right in th denials. You have to believe the truth is som where in the middle. So is the movie a caution tale about evil lurking beneath an everyday sub ban surface or about the power of suggestion a the abuse of power? It's both. (At Copley Pla Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Down with Love ★★★
First there was Gus Van Sant's refilming of the sc for Hitchcock's Psycho. Then came Todd Hayn Far from Heaven, a meticulous re-creation of D glas Sirk's 1950s melodramas. Now here's this s conscious and fizzy pastiche of characters, plots a decor from the Rock Hudson and Doris Day mov of the early 1960s. Well, at least this one has so genuine fun with its appropriating, as Renée Z weger plays the author of a bestseller telling wom to stop being distracted by love and Ewan McGre plays a womanizing reporter intent on exposing by making her fall for him. It's complete with m querades, split screens, the man's sexually ambigu best friend (the role Tony Randall played in originals), cheesy back projection, double entend only slightly more nudge-nudge than Hudson a Day's, a second relationship featuring the leads' c fidants—and Randall himself. (At Boston Co mon, Fenway and suburbs.)

Dumb & Dumberer: When Harry Met Lloyd ★
Loser! This unfunny prequel to the funny Jim C rey hit really has no reason for being. Carrey Jeff Daniels are not in this story of how their ch acters became friends back in high school (t their hairstyles are), and original writer-direct Peter and Bobby Farrelly had nothing to do w it. Instead, it's just a generic high school com with some bad slapstick. It even wastes Eug Levy as the evil principal. (At Boston Comm Fenway and suburbs.)

Finding Nemo ★★★

Toy Story movies and A Bug's Life, but it's a return to form after the weak Monsters, Inc. The digital animation continues to get more expressive, and human characters are again wisely kept to a minimum. This story of a fish trying to find his son, who was grabbed by a scuba diver, features equally expressive work from the voice cast, especially Albert Brooks as the overprotective father and Ellen DeGeneres as the forgetful fish who helps him on his quest. The amusing, but little-seen, early Pixar short "Knick Knacks" precedes the film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Hard Word ★★
Aussies Guy Pearce (The Time Machine) and Rachel Griffiths (Six Feet Under) return Down Under for this? A heist movie trying to blend crime, comedy and sex, this only gets more and more preposterous, especially during its endless series of resolutions and its unconvincing happy ending. (At Harvard Square.)

The In-Laws ★★
This pointless remake of the hilarious Alan Arkin–Peter Falk comedy steamrolls most of the comic finesse out of the story of two dads who couldn't be more different, but whose kids are about to marry. Douglas plays the Falk part, a spy who drags unwitting Brooks, a worry-prone doctor, into one of his assignments. But by adding a prologue of spy intrigue, the movie takes all the fun out of wondering whether the man of action is really a spy or just delusional. And Douglas and Brooks don't have a quarter of the chemistry that Falk and Arkin had. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Italian Job ★★
Big car chases are no camouflage for shoddy writing in this underachieving remake of a 1969 heist movie. The characters are all amazingly vague in this story of a gang of thieves (including Mark Wahlberg, Charlize Theron and Mos Def) that plots revenge after one of them makes off with the spoils of a Venice robbery. The story awkwardly maneuvers itself into the situation of the British original when a cache of gold is heisted from an armored car by using a fleet of stripped-down, souped-up Mini-Coopers. But the cool Minis overshadow the people this time. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Matrix Reloaded ★★½
This spotty sequel to 1999's pop-culture touchstone holds true to the theory that the middle movie is usually the weakest of trilogies (that's assuming this fall's third movie is better). Where the first was intimate and tightly constructed, the new movie is less specific in its internal logic and has a large scale that is sometimes clumsy (including council meetings and war talk reminiscent of, yikes, The Phantom Menace). The sequel seems even more like a videogame than the first, in its increasingly elaborate, animation-dependent fight scenes (which come off as self-parody at times) and in the "leveled" structure (fight to see the Oracle, move up to fight to see the Keymaker, move up to fight your way into the Source, etc.). The heavies have all the fun this time, including Hugo Weaving's Agent Smith, who can now replicate himself at will, and the snippy Frenchman played by Lambert Wilson. Not bad, but not as satisfying as hoped. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

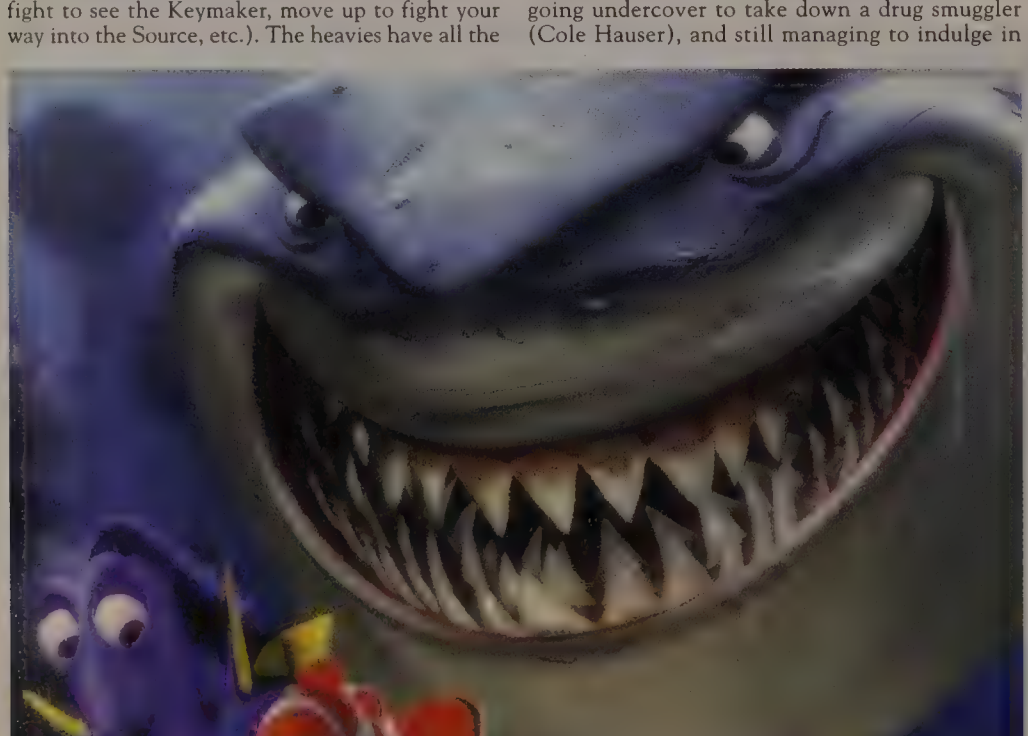
May ★★½
Writer-director Lucky McKee's blend of female alienation and gore—think The Virgin Suicides meets Carrie—makes for intriguing, though sometimes slow horror-drama. Angela Bettis, who actually played the title character in the 2002 TV remake of Carrie (filmed after this), plays the lonely and sympathetic young woman whose social troubles make her turn to violence. Jeremy Sisto is the guy that she gets a crush on before she proceeds to totally weird him out, while Anna Faris is her mischievous coworker. The blend is intriguing, though there's an awful lot of setup to get through before the horror. (At Copley Place and suburbs.)

A Mighty Wind ★★★½
In Christopher Guest's latest improvised mockumentary, following Waiting for Guffman and Best in Show, Eugene Levy and Catherine O'Hara dominate as a one-time folk duo and romantic couple that reunites for a memorial concert with two other groups. As the fallen folk idol who's had a rough three decades since, Levy is hilariously zonked out, but he and O'Hara sing so well together that their scenes are also disarmingly sweet and touching. Guest and his This Is Spinal Tap cohorts Michael McKean and Harry Shearer also score together as the Folksmen, though the three characters are underdeveloped as individuals. Meanwhile, like always, Fred Willard nearly steals the show. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Spellbound ★★★½
Jeffrey Blitz's documentary follows eight junior high schoolers with a magnificent obsession: they're all contestants in the 1999 National Spelling Bee. The movie takes them from their regionals through the Washington, D.C., finals, and it has quirky charm to spare. The kids make up an impressively broad cross section—boys and girls, city and country, white and of color—and the Bee really brings their families together and lets these smart kids, often misfits back in their hometowns, bond with others like themselves. The finals also generate more dramatic tension than any other movie this year, by far. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

2 Fast 2 Furious ★★
Without the original's Vin Diesel (the Steven Seagal of the new millennium), the sequel isn't quite as obnoxious as the original. But it is almost as dumb. Once again, everyone acts as if they're extras in a music video—which, considering how the street races are edited to music, isn't entirely incorrect. This just might be the world's most expensive pissing contest, and the "Look at me! Look at my car!" desperation of most of the characters is downright silly. The plot involves Paul Walker (whose character is now an ex-cop) and Tyrese going undercover to take down a drug smuggler (Cole Hauser), and still managing to indulge in enough male bonding for three movies (gee, who's on whose tail in this race?). The movie achieves its goal of throwing in one of those races every 15 minutes, but I'll take a grade-Z hot-rod movie over this one's product-placement, soundtrack-deal, MTV slickness any day. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

X2: X-Men United ★★★
The first one did nothing for me, but the X-Men sequel is a looser and more entertaining experience than its stiff predecessor. Perhaps it's the plot about a government higher-up (Brian Cox) who's determined to start a war that gives the sequel an extra timeliness. Cox, Patrick Stewart and Ian McKellen all give sly performances, Hugh Jackman gets tough-guy laughs as the Eastwood-esque Wolverine, Halle Berry and Famke Janssen kick sci-fi butt, and Alan Cumming has joined the cast as a creepy little mutant. The plot is much more focused and under control than the first time around, and the only real problem here is that the climax drags on, and on. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)



Marlin and his fish friend Dory meet shark Bruce while on a cross-ocean search in Finding Nemo.

Complex World

Blue Man Group expands beyond the theater to new arena-rock ambitions

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Blue Man Group is known for its long-running theatrical show, which has become an offbeat phenomenon from Boston to Las Vegas. But the ubiquitous trio of mute mutants with cobalt-blue heads has also pounded its way into the mainstream music world.

First the group, with help from additonal musicians, recorded an instrumental CD called Audio, which has sold a surprising half-million copies. Then Blue Man Group performed at the 2001 Grammy Awards with Moby and joined him on last summer's Area:Two tour. All of this set up The Complex, a more rock-oriented new disc, released this spring, that boasts guest appearances from Dave Matthews and Bush frontman Gavin Rossdale.

Blue Man Group jumps from the theater to the concert stage to support its CD The Complex.

Yet Blue Man Group also has a strong connection to Boston beyond its eight-year run at the Charles Playhouse. Drummer Todd Perlmutter, who previously played in the Boston band Orangutang as well as in Blue Man's stage show, produced both albums, while the mixing was handled by local mainstay Andrew Schneider, who has worked with Cave In and Scissorfight, among others.

Then there are Boston-bred singers Peter Moore (ex-Think Tree) and Tracy Bonham, who appear on The Complex and are part of an ambitious Blue Man concert tour that invades the FleetBoston Pavilion July 16. But the Boston connection really comes back to ex-Orangutang guitarist Chris Dyas, who worked in a Cambridge music store where Blue Man Group posted flyers to find musicians. Dyas put a flyer in his pocket with Perlmutter in mind for filling a drum position.

"I helped Todd get the job, then he returned the favor by getting me an audition," says Dyas, who had to brush up on his zither-playing technique to join the Blue Man stage show. When Blue Man Group branched into making albums, Byas and Perlmutter were there to make the jump.

"I'd been playing with Ray Corvair for about five years, taking 30-piece orchestrations and adapting them to trio, so I picked up tricks of the trade," says Dyas, who co-wrote songs for The Complex with Perlmutter and the founding Blue Man trio of Matt Goldman, Phil Stanton and Chris Wink. Dyas also had a hand in getting Matthews and Rossdale on board, even traveling to England to help guide the Bush singer through his vocal tracks for "The Current," a song that's also featured on the soundtrack to the new blockbuster Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines.

"Dave Matthews was actually easy [to get]," Dyas says. Matthews liked the track "Sing Along," which was looped with a hip-hop beat by Dan the Automator, and he is a huge Blue Man fan. "I think he's brought his whole crew to the New York shows about six times."

Dyas and Perlmutter played on both the CD and the first leg of the concert tour. But by the time the tour hits Boston, Dyas' slot will be covered by guitarist Dave Steele, yet another Orangutang alumnus.

"There are a lot of people who came out of Boston," echoes Kalen Allmandinger, one of the Boston-based Blue Men who will be extending his talents to the concert stage at the Pavilion. An actor by trade, the Iowa native learned drumming skills with Blue Man Group. On the tour, he and his comrades will be banging on everything from PVC pipes to a piano body with its strings exposed (the strings are struck with a sledgehammer).

"It's a lot more strenuous because it's nonstop," says Allmandinger of the show, which also features a towering set of lights and video screens designed by Marc Brickman, who has designed sets for Pink Floyd and Nine Inch Nails.

"We're trying to take on this big rock show, but the big element that's missing is the rock star," Allmandinger says. "We're just another piece of the machine. There are cameras involved, and our faces are projected on the big screen. But there are singers who are communicating the lyrics of the songs, so they're as much a part of it, as is the entire band. Everyone is on a little more equal terms."

With as many as 13 musicians involved (including the Blue Men), the show mainly focuses on music from The Complex. Among the songs is a cover of the Jefferson Airplane's "White Rabbit" (sung live by Bonham, who is also one of two opening acts) and "Time to Start," in which a narrator describes the steps of "rock concert movement," such as the head bob, the one-armed fist pump, and jumping up and down.

"I look at the Blue Man in this setting as a bit of a shaman, leading the audience through this set of experiences," Allmandinger says. "We're trying to deconstruct it, and get people to look exactly at what they're doing, and why they're doing it... and hopefully reach some elevated group experience." iB

New Music from an Old Soul

Gillian Welch's Soul Journey makes a pit stop in Boston

Gillian Welch sings her meditative ballads June 28 and July 2

It takes a certain type of songwriter to make you feel homesick for places you've never been, long for experiences you've never had and yearn for folks you've never met. Gillian Welch is that type of songwriter. Once her songs worm their way into your consciousness, good luck trying to shake them. You'll bear her burden as if it were your own.

Welch, the daughter of television composers, took up the family trade and began her career in Boston in the early '90s while a student at the Berklee College of Music. There she met David Rawlings, a like-minded musician whose passion for old-time country, folk and bluegrass rivaled her own. (He would become her songwriting partner on all her albums to date.) After graduating, the pair split for Nashville where Welch worked peddling her tunes to the publishers on Music Row and eventually struck a deal with the now-defunct label Almo Sounds to record her first album.

Even after her debut, Revival, received a Grammy nomination, Welch remained a relative unknown. In 1999, her path to mainstream recognition took a somewhat unlikely turn with an invitation to contribute to the soundtrack of the Coen brothers' mythical depression-era comedy O Brother, Where Art Thou?, an album that lassoed five Grammys and has sold nearly five million copies since its release. Welch's third album, Time (The Revelator), was released the following year. Strewn with gripping two-part harmonies and stark melodies that are positively haunting in their simplicity, the CD earned widespread acclaim.

After recording and performing mostly in an acoustic duo setting with Rawlings, Welch opted to augment her sound on her fourth record, Soul Journey, recruiting bassist Jim Boquist, dobro player Greg Leisz, fiddler Ketcham Secor and guitarist Mark Ambrose to join her in the studio. The just-released CD is being touted as Welch's most upbeat record to date. But for those who are not familiar with her previous work, "upbeat" is a relative term. Some things haven't changed though. Welch retains her knack for crafting contemporary songs that sound as if they've been passed down for generations. Her voice, as usual, is a soulful vortex that carries a wisdom that's well beyond her years. Although Rawlings' vocal contributions are missed, the album's meditative, salt-of-the-earth ballads are the perfect soundtrack for a long destination-less drive on an overcast day. Through June, Welch is on the road in support of Soul Journey, opening for Norah Jones. Their tour stops at the FleetBoston Pavilion for a sold-out show on June 28. Tickets are available for Welch's headlining show July 2 at the State Theatre in Portland. 609 Congress St., Portland, Maine (617-931-2000), July 2, 8pm, $22.50—Daniel Schulman

Cellar Dwellers

Techno finds a deep, dark home in Cambridge

The stony confines of the Cellar in Cambridge make a fitting home for Boston's techno underground. More a drinking institution than a dance club, the Cellar draws a mix of techno-minded students and locals. On Saturday, June 28, the bar hosts the second monthly installment of Deep, Dark and Sexy. Listeners can expect to hear everything from Detroit house and techno, to minimal house, old-school acid house, funky techno, as well as some downright sexy electro.

Local DJ and music scribe Craig Kapilow teamed up recently with Eric Gray, a friend and frequent DJ partner, to hatch the idea behind the Deep, Dark and Sexy party series. Deep, Dark and Sexy is a decidedly grassroots affair, with a DIY approach and a simple philosophy. "All we're really aiming to do is to provide a unique Saturday night forum for top-notch dance music, especially for proper techno, a genre that has been long underrepresented in Boston," Kapilow says. While dance music in general is often mistakenly categorized as "techno," Deep, Dark and Sexy focuses on the real thing, where complex but mechanical rhythms and textures weave around a steady 4/4 thump.

Musical definitions aside, the second Deep, Dark and Sexy party promises twice the techno punch, with four DJs facing off in two tag-team sets. Boston legend Tym Ryan will square off against Kapilow for a two-and-a-half-hour headlining set. According to Kapilow, the duo plans to snake its way through "club-rocking tracks from the countless eras and genres of dance music." Eric Gray and Alan Manzi spin the second set.

Electric Avenue

Retro neon signs light up the National Heritage Museum

Aside from the Las Vegas strip, Miami's South Beach and dodgy highway motels flickering "No Vacancy," neon signs have become advertising relics destined for dorm rooms and, most often, dumpsters. But, as the saying goes, one man's trash is another man's treasure. Dave Waller, who lives in the Boston area, has been collecting retired neon signs for more than 30 years. He started at age 9 when he dug up a decrepit sign at a local dump. Since then, Waller, a television special-effects expert by day, has spent considerable time trolling kitsch treasure chests like Route 1 for pieces of Americana. His collection now stands at 60-plus neons, 23 of which are currently on display in the National Heritage Museum's New England Neon exhibition.

The flashy museum display is woven with neon history, from its first use in advertising, for a 1910 Paris auto show, to its heyday in the late '40s and '50s. Waller's signs include such Massachusetts classics as the rocket ship from Auburn's Flying Yankee Restaurant and Allston's old Ellis the Rim Man sign. The collector says his favorite is the old Exeter Street Theatre sign. Among neons that are still standing, he admires the "impractical" Citgo landmark and the Union Oyster House. Will neon signs ever make a comeback? Waller expresses doubt: "I can see why it's not practical for businesses. They're so expensive. But signs are also people's identities." National Heritage Museum, 33 Marrett Road, Lexington (781-861-6559). www.monh.org. Mon.-Sat., 10 am-5 pm; Sun., 12-5 pm. Free. If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to typ up e-mailed messages) and write to:

Are You a Slayer?

I see you speeding by in your silver arrow. Where are you going? Do you have a castle and a cave in Newport's cliffs? Do you live in a lair? Pick me up next time I wave to you. Take me away and intoxicate me with your aroma. Let me be your sidekick. Let me get lost in those deep, dark eyes. I keep thinking of you day and night. I don't want to see you speed by me anymore. Take me on that journey, wherever you are headed. I won't bite you, hard.

Adam from Night Class

All I know is that your name is Adam and you work in Newton. We were together in a night class that met once a week for the past five months. Because of shyness, we didn't talk until the last two classes of the session. I never asked for your number or e-mail and have been beating myself up for it. Fate gave me another chance when we ended up seeing each other again on May 31. Even though the chance of two strangers seeing each other again in Boston is almost zero, I blew it again by not approaching you. Adam, if you read this and are interested in chatting with me, please send me an e-mail.
—lookingforadam2003@yahoo.com

Club Café

We first met on the evening of May 6 at Club Café, and I swear sparks flew! I was the woman with the short, spiky blond hair and blue eyes, dressed appropriately enough in fiery red. Your name is Kyra and you have straight brown hair, grey eyes, trendy glasses, and are intelligent and fun. We really hit it off and ever since that day, I've seen you a few times walking your bulldog on Tremont Street. I'm guessing you live in the Back Bay too? I was enchanted by you, and I think that you had a great time talking and laughing too. E-mail me soon! Let's see if those sparks can become a full-fledged feminine fire!

To the Beauty at Green Street Grill on April 11

I missed you at Isabella Stewart Gardner in May, but that was my fault—it was Mother's Day. I still see your pierced bellybutton peeking out from below your pink plunging neckline and I can't get it out of my head. I'm helplessly, hopelessly head-over-heals in love with the vision of you. I need to know if that package is complete. I never asked your name, and I've been dying a little every day because of it. Please give me another chance; it's all up to you. E-mail me.

Sexy Screenwriter

I met you at the Trenton train station on Memorial Day in the AM. Your train to Boston was over an hour late, my train home was 15 minutes late and we began to talk. Call it dumb luck, but I just had my college graduation in Boston the previous week and you were a second-year grad student at the same university. I did not catch your name, although you got mine as I walked onto my train. All I know is that you are from Alabama but have no accent, you are studying to be a screenwriter and you are very good-looking. If you know who you are, e-mail me.

Thank you for choosing such a wonderful name for me. I am glad that I have pleased you thus far and hope I continue to do so. If I rebel against your will, it is only to bring you the further pleasure of disciplining me. I do adore you.

State Street—Curly Red Hair and Tennis Rackets

A.K.A. angel in a blue dress: The first time I saw you, I was rendered breathless by your beauty. I often ride up the elevator with you, as I did this morning, but I am always too shy to speak. I'm not sure why I'm writing this...I noticed you had a copy of the IMPROPER with you this morning as you rode up the elevator and figured that if nothing else, I'd let you know that there's someone out there who thinks you are gorgeous. Perhaps one day I'll have the chance to tell you in person, rather than just say the elevator pleasantries. BTW, if you do read this, I'm the tall, short-haired guy from the elevator.

Something About You...

V: There's something about you. Your touch, your smile. I look into your eyes and I feel completely lost. The way you look at me across the room without saying anything at all. You knock me off my feet. You smile and I smile back. And we continue to hold each others' gaze, only to be interrupted by others around us. Yet I can't help but glance back and you're still looking at me, and there is a big smile on your face. I can't help this feeling and I don't think you can either. People are starting to see it too. If only things weren't so complicated and on Saturday night when we both went our separate ways, back to our homes, back to the ones that hold our hearts, we weren't left dreaming of each other. To think I missed the opportunity to dance with you all night long. You still owe me that kiss. Who's the chicken now?

Reply to NFG in the June 11 Issue

Excuse me, but I felt compelled to writ after reading your Impersonal. I think the guy you refer to as "the expert on international standards" was right to advise the people blocking his way tha they were not behaving properly. In most countries (except in the U.K. and in Ireland, where the "standers" are o the left and the "walkers" are on the right) it is the custom for people on escalators to stand on the right and walk on the left. I wasn't present durir the exchange you describe, but it sounds as though the guy with the Vinny Testa's bag had good reason to express his annoyance! And I'm not quite sure why you don't perceive it that way, but, as I said, I wasn't there.

Crazy Train

Me: on the Red line headed toward Central Square as the most unwilling companion of a man that I wanted nothing to do with, June 13...Friday the 13th. I should have known better. You: sitting directly across from me, looking concerned and making eye contact as needed. I'm glad someone was paying attention. I'm glad I was able to make a quick getaway from him. It was nice that you said "have good night." It made me feel better, but I still wished that you were getting off at Central Square, too. I t to keep an open mind and not be afraid to talk to "strangers." After that night it's a little harder. I was just being friendly and then that guy followed me onto the train. What do you think? If you see this and get a chance, drop me an e-mail. I'd be interested in a second opinion.

Stretch the Mind and Body

Friday afternoon yoga class is always little nicer when you are there. I'm n sure if you've ever noticed me trying t catch your eye during class but I've been a fan of your reddish/strawberr blond hair and quiet gracefulness for some time now. Maybe you're just a serious yoga student or simply not interested, but if you ever want to meet up after class or some other tim perhaps you'll drop me a line or retu the glance during class. We could go somewhere other than Sage. Me, I'm a bit older than you but not one of the real old-timers in the class.

rockie horoscope

JUNE 25 – JULY 9, 2003 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

CANCER JUNE 21-JULY 22

Summertime, and this year the living won't be easy. Simply having Saturn in your sign will test your patience, organizational skills and willingness to shoulder more responsibilities. Sound like a cosmic drag or the next step in your ascent to adulthood? Over the next two weeks, if you're amenable, you could receive support from an unexpected source with untapped resources. How does a leap of faith into the unknown grab you? Be sure to make Cancer new moon magic on the 29th; state your intention, do a self-blessing.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

No matter what else is going on or what your plans for the summer are, keep reminding yourself that expansive, protective, downright lucky Jupiter will be in Leo only until the Virgo new moon in August. That gives you two more lunar cycles—the Cancer new moon June 29 and the Leo new moon July 29—to absorb the purely personal benefits the cosmos is showering you with. Jupiter in your Virgo money house will watch over your cash flow, but for greater foresight, wisdom and self-confidence, time is running out.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Something totally unexpected may happen when impulsive Mars collides with rebellious Uranus in your Pisces house of partnerships. An instant sexual attraction or a relationship blown to bits—either possibility would change your scene dramatically. However, reliable support from an older, nurturing person can ease the awkwardness and be a balm for whatever hurts. Take the offer. Also take advantage of the fact that career-wise, you're in top form and tuned in to what the public wants.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

We both could be mistaken, but there seems to be a strong spiritual or artistic sensibility behind everything you're doing now. If you put your thoughts and feelings on paper, canvas, screen, etc., they're bound to get a favorable reception. Concentrating on the creative process can cushion you from the turmoil going on in other places. For further protection from wild, uncontrollable energies during these hectic times, be especially careful when you're near water, at least until the July Fourth holiday is over.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

While the rest of us hide our heads in the sand, the water signs will benefit from the changes in the cosmic equaculture. Because the nurturing Cancer sun reinforces steering Saturn, and your Mars co-ruler joins innovative Uranus in Pisces, Scorpio could successfully combine traditional, family-oriented activities with groundbreaking Mars-Uranus energy. No matter what you're up to, decorating the house or selecting a mutual fund, you should be OK. Another advantage: a rewarding trine from prosperous Jupiter to your Pluto co-ruler.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Step toe through the garden of earthly delights and Boschian horrors and you may appreciate the benefits directed your way. Chief among them is the rewarding trine from your protective Jupiter ruler to powerful Pluto in your sign; if that aspect can improve the world situation, it should help lighten your outlook. Discord in the family or a broken pipe in the kitchen is beyond annoying, so let a Moon Child solve those problems. What'll give you pure pleasure are the encouraging words of love and the laughs coming from the young at heart.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Play hey from work: What a concept! One of the more advantageous financial opportunities for Caps appears when aggressive Mars in your money house trines your conservative Saturn ruler. Go ahead, take the leap. Further support comes from sun's annual meeting with Saturn, and to amp up the benefits of that coalition, inventive Uranus adds an element of surprise. Go ahead, be irreverent. The Cancer new moon on the 29th is key; make your intentions about a gig and/or a relationship known to everyone concerned.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Only once every two years does militant Mars meet your non-conformist Uranus ruler. If nothing major hits the fan, we assume you make your point, declare your independence and move on to something else. Since this is one of those bi-annual time slots, be sure that what you're about to wreck—or even give a gentle nudge to—is what you want to happen. No sign knows better how tricky idiosyncratic Uranian energy can be. However, this time Uranus receives strong support from stable Saturn, so you're more likely to consider your family or an authority figure.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

If cranky is all you get when acerbic Mars meets unpredictable Uranus in the early degrees of Pisces, consider yourself blessed. Cut, shocked or burned is more likely. Big surprises can happen when these destructive forces combine, so to safeguard your precious person, stay away from the water, far from sharp edges and out of electric storms. Emotionally, you're that volcano ready to erupt at the slightest provocation. Comfort comes from artistic friends and older family members; seek them out.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

This is a tricky period. On one hand, your Mars ruler can incite a rebellion while it merges with independent Uranus. Any action that cuts the ties that bind should suit you just fine. On the other hand, Mars receives strong support from stable Saturn and the nurturing Cancer sun, so opting for the tried-and-true would work for you, too. Although dilemmas like this won't pop up very often, Rams can count on a certain amount of confusion for the rest of the year. Mars navigating the diffuse emotional waters of Pisces makes it hard to see clearly.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Too clever, too glib, too marvelous for words. Such is the case when your Venus ruler joins chatty Mercury in quick-witted Gemini. If there's something you need to say or write, now is the time. Not only will you communicate with ease, the content will be imaginative and effective. An aura of spirituality and artistic excellence as Venus reaches out to idealistic Neptune can make this one of the more glorious weeks in a long time. However, that whiff of danger coming from your current romantic interest might mess things up.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Speak your mind loud and clear. Although Gemini is rarely at a loss for words, now is an excellent time to express yourself. You don't have to be brilliant, amusing or even that accurate. Whatever you decide to dish out will be appreciated, even adored, because loving Venus has hooked up with your Mercury ruler. This coupling also improves your odds of attracting a diverse bunch of candidates for a romantic relationship. While an artist-dreamer may not seem much of a threat, anyone with an obvious obsession could be a problem.

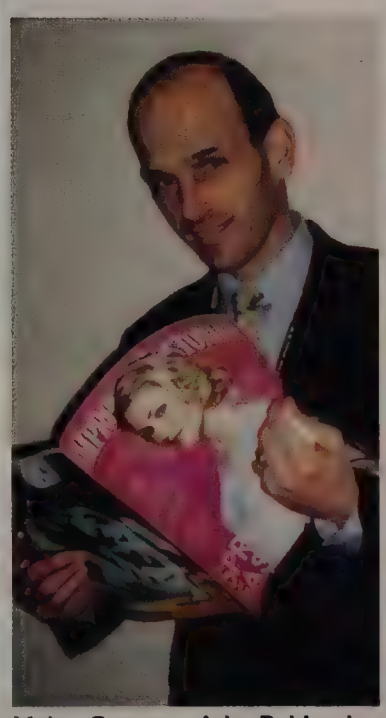
UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Our lawyers have advised us to tell you that we do not condone bungee-jumping off bridges while reading the IMPROPER, as Jen Kott did in Queenstown, New Zealand.

Amy Kucharik and Chris Sneeringer smeared mud on their faces and bathed in the Blue Lagoon geothermal spa outside Grindavik, Iceland. Nearby, Icelanders laughed.

Linda Aranas and Brian Skerry went spelunking (huh-huh) in Harrison's Cave i Barbados. That's a darling bag, Brian.



Maine Governor John Baldacci reads up on fashion tips to bring back to Augusta.

Amy Dunaway is working for the Peace Corps in Mokolo, Cameroon, where she organized this girls' club. Excuse us while we go return our new Brookstone croquet set, which we now feel profoundly guilty about buying.

M.J. O'Connor's 27 Columbus Ave., at Park Plaza, Boston 617-482-2255 Eclectic Irish Food and spirits, a warm friendly staff and beautifully hand-crafted woodwork and murals make this authentic upscale Irish pub one of Boston's best. Starting with only the finest ingredients, each dish is slow cooked according to recipes that have been used for generations. If you're looking for a respite from the hustle and bustle of the city, M.J. O'Connor's is a comfortable and welcoming environment to enjoy a delicious meal, have a pint and some great conversation. Open 11 am - 2 am 7 days a week.

Ned Devine's Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Quincy Market Building, Boston 617-248-8800. Located in historic Faneuil Hall Marketplace's Quincy Market Building, Ned Devine's is an upscale Irish Pub concept which features hearty Irish specialties and contemporary American cuisine. Whether it's an afternoon business meeting, dinner with family or after work social gathering, Ned's is a warm meeting spot to enjoy conversation and a wonderful meal. Hand painted murals, imported Irish woodwork, original brickwork and ambient lighting create a comfortable atmosphere in the heart of downtown Boston. Open 11 am - 2 am 7 days a week.

The Rack 24 Clinton St., Faneuil Hall Marketplace Boston, 617-725-1051. Winner of Improper's 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001 & 2002 Boston's Best awards. Whether you choose to dine in our streetside greenhouse, at the bar, in the dining room enjoying live entertainment, or snack at your pool table, expect nothing less than a first class meal from The Rack. We serve lunch and dinner from 11:30 am - 1 am. From fresh, homemade pastas and blackened center-cut tuna steaks to grilled pizzas, tasty burgers and Faneuil Hall's most original sandwiches.

Ristorante Fiore 250 Hanover St., Boston, 617-371-1176. One of the true gems of Boston's Historic North End is the fine casual dining of Ristorante Fiore...this authentic Italian experience features central-southern cuisine served in three distinctive dining rooms as well as the charming sidewalk cafe. The rooftop at Fiore's is the hottest spot in the North End...it's also the North End's only rooftop dining. A great place for dinner and cocktails any night of the week. Valet parking available.

Solas 710 Boylston St., Lenox Hotel, 617-933-4803. Solas means comfort in Gaelic and comfort is exactly what you will find here, along with a lot of "Irish" good fun. Solas, a Boston pub with an Irish soul, illustrates its Irish influences in the architectural styles and furnishings. The menu is influenced by a traditional, yet decidedly modern Irish cuisine. And you'll always find a warm, hospitiable staff looking to pour you a cold pint. Open 11 am - 2 am 7 days a week.

Sunset Grill & Tap: 130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331; Cantina: 916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 617-731-8646. Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 380 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 am.

Temple Bar 1688 Mass Ave., Cambridge, 02135 617-547-5055. Open Mon.-Sun. 5pm-1am, Brunch Sat. and Sun. 11am-5pm. Located just outside of Harvard Square, Temple Bar has been both a destination and a local for the educators, professionals and students of Cambridge and its surrounding towns. It's colorful European/American menu, home style Ala-Carte weekend brunch and funky interior, complete with a solid copper bar stretching the length of the restaurant, have won many awards and accolades from many local publications.

At the Green and White Bash, from top: Carolyn and Mike Rodeno; Bill and Sally Fay Cottingham; Kelly and Paul Verrochi and Beth Dickerson; Jennifer and Tom James

THE DEPARTMENT OF PARKS AND RECREATION...

It was your typical block party, except for the Chanel fashion show in the middle of Commonwealth Avenue, and the live auction that raised scads of cash for the Friends of the Public Garden, and the fact that instead of a potluck supper, there was a catered dinner beneath lavishly decorated tents on the mall, and the fact that everyone was in formal wear.

But otherwise, the Green and White Bash was just your regular gathering of neighborhood folks, assuming you live in a particularly upscale neighborhood. For instance, there were such gorgeous specimens as Courtney Forrester (wearing Narciso Rodriguez), Martha O'Brien (in Carolina Herrera), Erin Gilligan (in Issey Miyake), Karen Rotenberg (in Valentino), and Anna Cheshire Levitan (in Chanel, of course, since she was the party's co-chair). Also on hand were modeling den mother Candy Ford, party pair Amy and Paul Harden, blonde bombshell Beth Dickerson, hunkalicious ER doc Clay Lawrence, Harvard factotum Bob Mitchell, the magnificent Susan Doll, brunette stunner Roberta Weiner, mega-philanthropists Michele and Howard Kessler, Our Lady of Armani Collette Royer, Republican publican Tom Kershaw, assorted Back Bay and Beacon Hill billionaires, and one man who said that the fashion show "reminded me of the good old days at the Naked I."

Be that as it may, the entire evening was elegant beyond compare, with a gorgeous setting, fantastic food and a band that got even the stiffest of socialites to shake their groove things, which just goes to show you that what's green and white is fabulous all over.

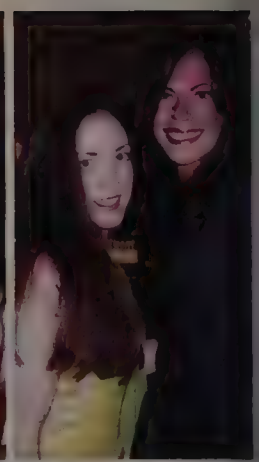
THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC MEETS HOLLYWOOD...

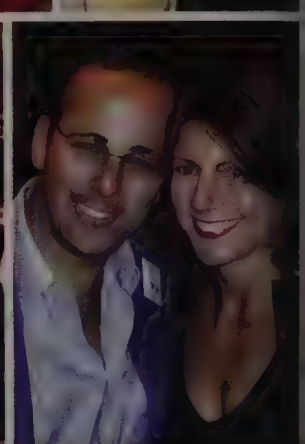
As famous as it is for presenting consistently excellent entertainment, the American Repertory Theatre is equally famous for throwing parties that famous people go to, the past guests at their annual spring fund-raiser having included the likes of Matt and Ben and Gwyneth and Meryl.

This year, the major star was Oscar-winner Chris Cooper, who was there with his wife, Marianne Leone Cooper, to accept an award on behalf of his friend, Christopher Walken. Underneath a big top worthy of Bozo (set up smack dab in the center of the Radcliffe quad), guests mixed, mingled, nibbled and tippled, while the ART's new artistic director, Bob Woodruff, worked the crowd. Present and accounted for: the incomparable Joan Parker and her husband, fiction factory Robert B., arts boosters Lee and Cokie Perry, one-woman fireworks display Susan Poduska, philanthropic brunette Barbara Jordan, retired Harvard bigwig Henry Rosovsky, former ART head honcho Bob Brustein, reformed fashionista Kathy Connor, caterer to the stars Dan Mathieu, Italian femme fatale Gloria Pastorino, stunning young thing Missy Powar, the remarkably charming Tom Sellar, and so on and so forth down the proverbial A-list.

The tent was designed as an "eclectic lounge noir," which apparently meant sofas and bars and free-form seating, and along with entertainment by the Flying Karamazov Brothers, the evening included an appearance by jazz sensation Peter Cincotti.

Summing the whole thing up, one guest said, "I'm a little confused. This party is way too fabulous for Cambridge."





At the Peace Games party, clockwise from upper left: Tom and Terry Hamilton; Nina Fialkow and Paulina Neely; Jonathan and Patti Kraft; Kristina Hare Lyons

RING-DINGS AMID THE BLING-BLING...

Opportunities to act like a 6-year-old are few and far between, which is one of the many reasons why the fund-raiser for Peace Games (an innovative violence-prevention program), hosted by Aerosmith's Tom Hamilton and his beguiling wife, Terry, was such a welcome change of pace.

Held at the Shreve, Crump & Low store in the Chestnut Hill Mall, the evening drew hordes of high-powered heavy hitters out to the hinterlands, among them: the ridiculously gorgeous Paulina Neely and her hockey-player husband, Cam, mega-restaurateur Michela Larson, soignee socialite Nina Fialkow, bright young things Patti and Jonathan Kraft, groovy do-gooder Kristina Hare Lyons, banking babe Heather Campion, and bearded hipster Larry Moulter, to name only a handful.

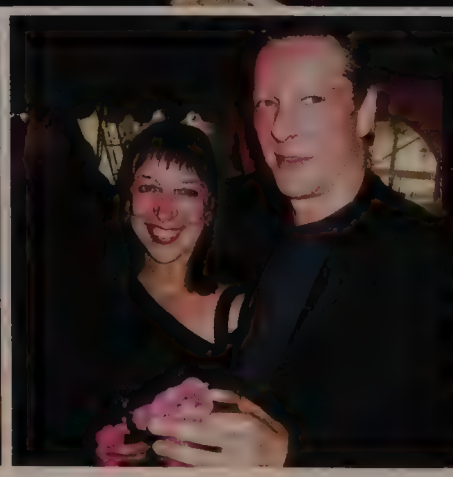
In addition to sampling some of the games that the program uses to teach kids peaceful ways to resolve conflict, guests could gorge themselves on kids' foods like pizza, burgers and chocolate chip cookies, cleverly served using a board game like Candyland as a platter, or from the back of a plastic dumptruck being driven by Mr. Potato Head.

Thankfully, though, adult beverages were available. In the words of one guest: "The only thing I don't miss about childhood is the alarming lack of cocktails." ■



At the ART party, clockwise from upper left: Bob Woodruff; Joe Zina, Mario Russo and Bernie Toale; Marianne Leone Cooper and Chris Cooper; Gideon Lester and Missy Powar

LAUGHING IT UP

If you follow pop culture, you can probably name a few well-known comedians who got their start in Boston. Jay Leno, Conan O'Brien and Denis Leary have all posed for IMPROPER covers in recent years, and this issue we add Sex and the City's Mario Cantone to the pantheon of Boston-bred comedians we've celebrated. But how well do you know the current Boston comedy scene—by many accounts one of the top three in the country?

For this issue's feature "Funny Business" (page 18), writer Ezra Dyer explores the local scene and the comedy venues, some now defunct, where so many stars got their start. He also talks to the promising comedians whose faces and writing credits may appear in tomorrow's movies, talk shows and sitcoms.

Fashion editor Samantha House, a self-described comedy groupie, continues the theme in this issue's fashion spread (page 30), a stylish look at seven of her favorite Boston performers.

Perhaps you'll be inspired to gather some friends and check out a show at a local club soon.

CONTENT DISCONTENT

Your publication needs more social commentary that will involve readers emotionally and stir up some controversy. The title of your publication implies they will get that kind of content, but after reading your latest Music Issue (June 25), I found the only thing improper about the magazine was the cover title. In fact, I found the advertisements in some cases to be more improper than the journalism they appeared beside.

Specifically I would like to comment on the lack of substance in the writing. The subtitle of Ezra Dyer's article "Just Trust Me" suggests it will enlighten the reader about scandals in journalism. On the contrary, Mr. Dyer uses the column as a personal podium to vent about his deadline stress. Nobody wants to read about how tough it is to meet a deadline while he gets paid to write in his home "gazing out across the canopy of the banyan forest that surrounds my treetop geodesic dome in Beacon Hill."

Lastly and less critically, I would like to comment on Paul Robicheau's "10 Bands that Rock" article. I felt the topic was worthy, and while his clichéd style of writing had occasional rhythmic melody and impeccable vernacular, it was obviously overcompensation for a lack of content.

I hope in the future THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN lives up to the responsibilities evoked by its name and delivers social journalism filled with substance and content that impregnates minds with contemplation and reflection.

Who the hell does Ezra think he is? ("Just Trust Me," June 25) A "world-class wordsmith"? Well, this reader disagrees…and, frankly, thinks he should not be given a column to spew his uppity, selfish views.

In his latest column, he criticizes other writers for their journalistic indiscretions and then says that "You'll never find such despicable shenanigans in this column." Then what does he do but go on to list the despicable shenanigans in his previous columns, like having an intern write an entire article with no credit! But what infuriated me the most is that he compared his "very stressful profession" to that of an emergency room doctor! What? If his stupid column doesn't run, nobody dies. Doctors have that hanging over their heads. As far as I'm concerned, the only thing that he should have hanging over his head is a sign that reads "Asshole."

Editor's Note:

Speaking of things that are over people's heads…Ezra replies that living in an urban treetop geodesic dome is not all it's cracked up to be. His neighbors, the Berenstain Bears, "borrowed" his Weed-wacker three months ago, and Peapod won't deliver groceries above the fifth branch. And he still has to leave his tree to come to the office (see photo above), just like unimportant people, such as ER doctors.

RIDING THE WAVE

Building a new restaurant from the ground up in the once-burgeoning Fort Point Channel area of South Boston during a weak economy might not be at the top of many entrepreneurs' to-do lists. That is, unless you're Shahram Naghibi, who considered it a good time to buy into this area—in part because real estate suddenly became more affordable. "We knew business wouldn't be as good," says Naghibi, who recently opened Blue Wave on Congress Street, "but I see a bright future here," he says.

For the past 16 years, Naghibi has owned a popular sandwich shop on Congress Street called Siena's. A year and a half ago, he decided to lease the space next door (formerly a parking lot), and he spent the past year creating Blue Wave, a restaurant/lounge in the style of nearby Lucky's. It's open and spacious, with dark wood tables, floor-to-ceiling windows and an extensive American-Italian menu of burgers, pasta, pizza and seafood entrees. A weekly rotation of live music includes everything from neo-soul to open mike to live jazz and rock, and designer martinis are the late-night drink of choice. So far, says Naghibi, business has been good, despite the vacancies in local office buildings. People might be drawn by the name, which conjures up sparkling waters crashing on a sandy beach—an image far superior to the reality of the stagnant harbor down the street. 343 Congress St., Boston (617-790-0720).—Erin Hagedorn and Julie Suratt

G SPA BLISS

When Gretchen Monahan, founder of Greta Cole and Greta Luxe, opened G Spa on Newbury Street, its cheeky moniker made me (and plenty of passersby) giggle. I attended the opening party and thought, "Good party, nice people," but everyone smiles at a gala reception, especially when the champagne is flowing. I went into the spa a week later, though, and found the same kind of energy. The white walls with lime-green and pink accents are instantly soothing, but more important, the staff is welcoming and friendly (a rare find in the spa circuit). And if they're administering a service as intimate as the ménage-a-spa (three clinicians giving you three treatments simultaneously), you definitely want good relations.

G Spa also offers a beauty bar where patrons can get "quickie" manicures, pedicures and facials that easily fit into a lunch hour, with time to spare for grabbing a salad. And let me tell you, you'll never have a better buff than G Spa's pedicure, which uses a device that looks like a hair dryer with a small sandpaper disc attached to rub away calluses and dry skin. The oxygen facial is also excellent; you walk out rejuvenated and fresh. Check out one of the many services that G Spa offers. You're in for a truly orgasmic experience.

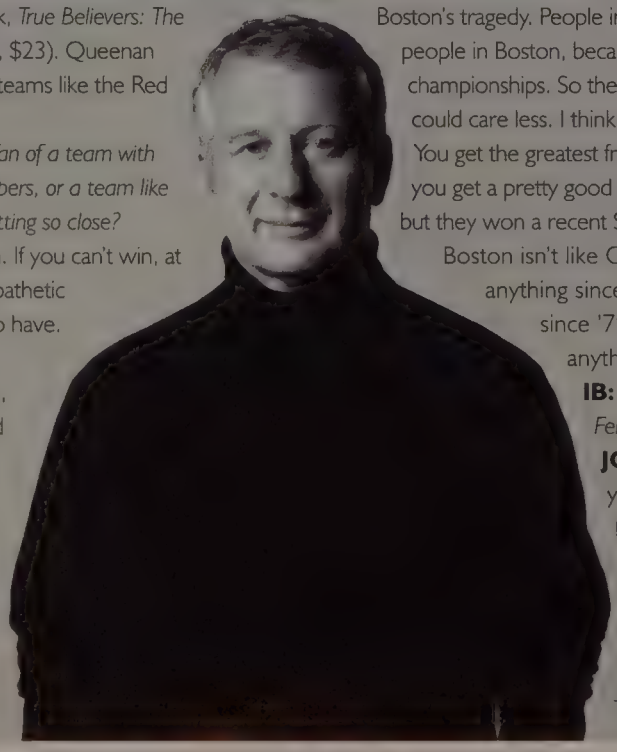
MEET JOE Q



Humorist Joe Queenan (author of books like Red Lobster, White Trash, and the Blue Lagoon: Joe Queenan's America) takes a good look at sports nuts in his latest work, True Believers: The Tragic Inner Life of Sports Fans (Holt, $23). Queenan zeros in on fans of underachieving teams like the Red Sox and his own beloved Phillies.

IB: What's more pathetic, being a fan of a team with no hope of winning, like the L.A. Clippers, or a team like the Red Sox, which teases you by getting so close?

JQ: The Clippers have no tradition. If you can't win, at least you want to have that tragic, pathetic mythology—which the Red Sox do have. You figure that nothing worse than trading Babe Ruth will ever happen, but bad things keep happening. Ted Williams never wins; Jim Lonborg puts the ski pole through his chest; and then after the great Fisk home run, they lose. And then '86.

IB: Is there any hope for the Red Sox?

JQ: I think if you polled a lot of baseball fans, they'd say they hoped the Red Sox never win. While the Cubs are viewed as kind of harmless losers, the Red Sox are viewed as being tragic. But it's Boston's tragedy. People in Philadelphia don't feel sorry for people in Boston, because the Celtics won 16 championships. So the attitude is "Screw you!" But we could care less. I think fans in Boston really get it both ways: You get the greatest franchise in the history of basketball; you get a pretty good hockey team; football, not so great, but they won a recent Super Bowl. And you get Fenway. Boston isn't like Cleveland. Cleveland hasn't won anything since '64. Seattle hasn't won anything since '79. San Diego's never won anything.

IB: You think the Red Sox should stick with Fenway?

JQ: Oh, yeah. Of course. Why would you want to change it?

IB: Too much bad karma. Too many dull teams full of big, slow players...

JQ: True. But if the Red Sox got rid of Fenway and they won, who would care about the Red Sox?

BABY'S GOT SAUCE

These days, it seems that a cocktail is as much a trendy accessory as a Piaget watch or a pair of Christian Louboutins. The Cosmopolitan has enjoyed a long run in the limelight, thanks in part to consistent plugs on Sex and the City, but word has it there are a few up-and-comers to watch for. Michael MacDonnell, master mixologist at the Las Vegas Olives in the swank Bellagio Hotel, was in town recently to revamp Todd English's Bonfire and Olives cocktail menus, and we asked him about the next "it" drinks. If the name of your game is beating the trends, MacDonnell says what's old is new—classic cocktails are the way to go. A World War I–era oldie-but-goodie, the Sidecar, a simple blend of Germain-Robin brandy, Cointreau and fresh lemon juice, is among the hottest revivals. "We've featured it on the menu for the past two years in Vegas, and all the people who ask about it are repeat customers and get it every time," says MacDonnell. "When it's done right, it's heavenly." Another saucy-sauce making a comeback, he says, is the Prohibition-era Aviation (Tanqueray 10, maraschino liqueur and fresh lemon juice).—Jessica Iredale

PICNICS TO GO, AND WINE 101

Upscale Downstairs... The ever-expanding Briar Group recently added the Commonwealth Restaurant (formerly the Commonwealth Brewery) to its collection of nightclubs and pubs. The new venue strikes a happy medium between the group's swanky Azure in the Lenox Hotel and the laid-back Green Briar in Brighton. Brass fixtures, huge windows and a brewery atmosphere still dominate the restaurant and pub upstairs. Downstairs, in the former brewery's basement, is the newly unveiled Downtown Lounge, which features plush banquettes, red-lit pillars, smooth music, sophisticated martinis and a dark atmosphere. The bar has the potential to attract the over-25 crowd it desires, but the concept—"an evolution in the heart of North Station," as the Downtown folks bill it—is still evolving... hence the temporary folding chairs upstairs. Look for a polished product within the next few months. 138 Portland St., Boston (617-523-8383).

Taster's Choice... If you're one of those diners who has a mild anxiety attack when the wine list falls in your lap, a little Wine Tasting 101 might be in order. No. 9 Park's Guess the Grape series can mold even the most devout beer drinker into a oenophile in just a few weeks. On Monday and Tuesday nights, guests can taste three wines based on the night's theme (past themes included Grapes of Italy and Three Whites from Around the World) while bartenders offer clues based on smell and taste to help participants guess the grape's identity. Tastings are $20 during July and $25 in August, and the series culminates in a summer tasting party. 9 Park St., Boston (617-742-9991).

Dining Alfresco... Picnics in the park are often more hassle than they're worth. Squished PB & J sandwiches, broken cookies and warm soda aren't the most appetizing foods—and who really owns a picnic basket? Leave it to the Four Seasons to make dining on the dirt an upscale affair. Its newly launched picnic-to-go package offers a choice of two or three courses (think marinated asparagus with roasted shallots and truffle oil, and crabmeat salad on a poppy roll with tapenade and oven-cured tomatoes) for $38-$45 per person. Packages feed up to six people and include a classic wicker basket (return requested), cutlery and plateware. 200 Boylston St., Boston (617-351-2066).

Pie-O-My... There's a new pizza joint on the block. Neopolitan pizzeria DiMio opened six months ago near Porter Square under the management of Daniel Adelson and the former owners of Coolidge Corner's Vici. The menu features panini made with fresh-baked focaccia and gourmet thin-crust pizza with exotic toppings like shrimp and duck. Buono! *1782 Mass. DEAR DIARY

If you never read P.J. Stock's online diary during the Bruins season, you missed a startlingly honest look into the daily life of a professional athlete. The man whom Joe Thornton named the toughest fighter in the NHL contemplated his uncertain future with the team, reviewed movies and described his toddler son's affinity for crawling around and eating the dog's food. "My sensitive side is really starting to kick in here," he wrote back when the weather turned nice, briefly, this spring. Here are our votes for other pro athlete diaries we'd like to read:

Kendrick Perkins: The Celtics' second 2003 draft pick would reveal what it's like to graduate from high school to the NBA. "I'm worried that I'm missing something, not making some school millions of dollars while getting hassled by the NCAA every time I buy a new shirt at the Gap." No, not really.

Tom Brady: "Today I came home to find 32 women waiting on my lawn. That brings the total so far this week to 85."

Byung-Hyun Kim: "I love Boston. I hope we score 25 runs every time I start. Also: my translator is very sexy. All of the women who read this should make his acquaintance. His phone number is ..." Ezra Dyer

ROOFING IT

There are precious few open-air rooftop bars and restaurants in Boston, making the rooftop dining and/or imbibing experience all the sweeter for its scarcity. Here's a short guide to the lofty establishments:

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Wireless White Horse... Allston is going high-tech. As of June 19, White Horse Tavern patrons can surf the Web and check their e-mail free of charge. Taking a cue from Newbury Street wireless pioneers like the Wrap and Trident Booksellers—both of which offer free Internet to patrons—White Horse proprietor Doug Bacon set up the high-speed wireless service "as a benefit to our daytime customers who come in with laptops to work and check e-mail." Anyone with an 802.11b wireless card is good to go. Bacon sees the service as a lasting trend. "Within five years, every place you go will have this," he predicts. 116 Brighton Ave., Allston (617-254-6633).

Blue Man Bandit... Think jaywalking is the only illegal activity that happens on buttoned-up Newbury Street? Think again. Around 12:15 am June 27, an M&M-napping occurred outside the newly opened Sugar Heaven. Store manager Debra Novack was just closing up shop when she noticed the absence of Mr. Blue, the four-foot blue M&M who stands guard outside the shop. Apparently walking around with a giant M&M in tow isn't a real head-turner, as the perp went unnoticed by street traffic and Armani Café patrons. Novack and Co. want their mascot back. "It's just not the same without him." A sweet reward is promised for his safe return. 218 Newbury St., Boston (617-266-6969).

Cool Bus... Remember riding to school on the bus and wishing that instead of an uncomfortable seat, an irritable bus driver and a sniffling kid sitting beside you, your bus had a sound system, pulsating lights and a route that included a string of bars? No? Well then put down your protractor while we give you a lesson in Busology. The Bustonian, the brainchild of Matt Robitaille and Brian Napoleon, is a 36-passenger school bus that's been converted into a rolling nightclub. Inside, blue jumpseats line the sides, neon lights decorate the ceiling, and a 10-speaker stereo system blasts your favorite music. There's a cooler up front, and the nightly itinerary is whatever suits your mood. Since the Bustonian rolled into town in early May, it's become popular for bachelor and bachelorette parties, and Robitaille says he's working with singles networks to line up trips. Sized Up... From busking to playing bingo (think Via Matta), you need a permit for many public activities these days. In the last edition of the Word, we highlighted Somerville's newly opened 108 gallery as a place worth visiting. Apparently not everyone agreed. Elaine Belsito's opening performance-art piece, If You Lost Five Pounds You'd Be Perfect, featured the sports bra– and skimpy shorts–clad artist squeezing into tight clothing in the gallery's front windows. The June 27 performance drew a crowd of about 10 people outside until a Somerville cop stopped the show, saying, "Get out of the window and put some clothes on...or I'm going to arrest you." Turns out neighbors had alerted the authorities—and now the show is on hold until gallery owner Kate Ledogar can obtain an entertainment permit. "I wasn't doing this to shake things up," says Ledogar. "The officer treated it like it was a burlesque show, and it became very embarrassing, like something dirty was going on." Meanwhile, Belsito's performance is on view on video, safely within the gallery walls.

Wild Coyotes... The Irish barmaids are out, and scantily clad, dancing bartenders are in at the former Irish Embassy and soon-to-be Coyote Ugly. At least that's what we're expecting from the New York-bar-turned-Hollywood-chick-flick-turned-national-bar-chain. Word on the street is the restaurant/saloon will open around July 31 and talented wannabe-Coyotes are invited to strut their stuff for the judges at the Coyote search July 20. (Boston head of operations John Cestare says previous auditions have drawn crowds of 600-1,200 women). Ladies, grab your undies and get ready to jump on the bar. Bar owners, make sure your entertainment licenses are in order. 234 Friend St., Boston (617-854-7300). www.coyoteuglysaloon.com. Call for audition information.—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

T IS FOR "TERRIFIC"

Nothing makes you appreciate walking like joining the rush-hour crowd on the Green Line

I recognize that public transit systems are imperfect beasts. In Paris, the trains are not only crowded, they're filled with beggars roaming the aisles talking about how they need money to buy medicine for their sick babies, when you know they're going to turn right around and spend it on art supplies and nice cheeses. Luckily, I can listen to their spiel, smile and say, "Boy, that's great! I don't speak much French, but congratulations on your lottery win!" If it turns out they speak English, I say I'm Japanese.

It's no better anywhere else. In London, the stations are all located near the earth's core in case the Germans act up again. In New York, a token now costs $83.50 and the trains are filled with New Yorkers. Detroit has an excellent monorail that connects lots of places that you wouldn't go on a dare. So in the context of other public transit systems, the T isn't really that dysfunctional. But that doesn't mean I have to like it.

I rekindled my T hatred one recent morning when I was forced to ride the Green Line into work. I normally walk, but that particular day I found myself joining the crowd at St. Paul Street on the C Line.

After a long wait, I was happy when a train finally showed up. How naive of me. This train made New Delhi look sparsely populated. It seemed as if, when the doors opened, people would just explode out onto the ground in a pile, gasping for air and blindly stumbling around in search of an escalator. But I was determined to get on that train, even if I was going to be the last pair of Hanes in the Samsonite.

I squeezed my way in at the very front, barely making it to the top of the stairs. It's good that I made it that far, because this was the second section of cars, the one that includes a driver who doesn't actually get to do anything except yell at people for standing on the stairs. "Move into the car!" she bellowed. "Clear the stairs!" All this earned her was stares from the stairs, as nobody could move any further into the train without violating both the laws of physics and several public-decency ordinances.

Soon the doors closed and the train was moving. At the next stop, about 30 feet away, a few more optimistic people climbed aboard. Hey, who needs oxygen? The non-driving driver seemed happy to have some new recruits to yell at, and everyone else seemed happy to ignore her. Everyone, that is, except for one short, mousy woman, who was hellbent on getting off the stairs. She put her head down, dug her elbow into my side, and made one of the strangest noises I've ever heard from a human being. She didn't even open her mouth, yet she produced a determined mewl, not very loud but quite insistent. "Erreeewwwww!" she said, jabbing my ribcage and pushing toward her mental goal line. "Rrrrruuuuuuwwww." She sounded like a muskrat in heat trying to do yogic breathing. I stared longingly at the "pull here if you can't stand to be on this godforsaken train for one second longer" emergency handle above the door.

At the next stop, a woman had the unbelievable gall to try to get on the train carrying a gigantic cooler. Needless to say, this endeavor received little encouragement from anyone. Unless she popped open that Igloo to reveal a couple of kidneys waiting to be transplanted, she wasn't getting on that train, and even then she wouldn't have been given a seat.

Finally we made it into the tunnel heading for Kenmore. Here's something I don't understand: Why must the train lurch so much once it's in the tunnel? I can see if we're up on the street and cars and pedestrians cut the train off, but how many surprises are there down in the tunnel? What is the driver thinking? "Dum de dum, driving the train, driving the train. Hey, I wonder what I'll have for lunch? Pastrami would be nice but I had that yesterd—Oh my God the station!" [Screeching brakes, sound of passengers whumping against the front of the car.]

I WAS DETERMINED TO GET ON THAT TRAIN, EVEN IF I WAS GOING TO BE THE LAST PAIR OF HANES IN THE SAMSONITE

Since I was surrounded by flesh, I braced myself by pushing up against the ceiling. By the time we got to Copley, this constant overhead press had my shoulders on fire. People were sneezing like they were auditioning for a NyQuil commercial. I was late. Someone on the train hadn't taken his or her Beano. When the doors opened I bolted up the stairs and out into daylight, finally free from soul-crushing, dank tunnels and the mass of sweaty, coughing humanity.

It is a good deal for a dollar, though. IB

MARIO CANTONE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY BILL STREICHER

Stand-up comedian and actor Mario Cantone, 43, was born in Boston and raised in Everett and Stoneham. After graduating from Stoneham High in 1978, he earned his bachelor's degree from Emerson in 1982 and went to L.A. to break into acting. After nine months, he moved to New York and eventually landed his first TV job, as host of a children's show on a local station. He has since appeared on The Late Show with David Letterman and The Rosie O'Donnell Show and as a host of A&E's Biography. He has a semiregular gig on the morning talk show The View, while his numerous credits for Comedy Central include the USO Comedy Tour, Premium Blend and his own half-hour special, Comedy Central Presents... Mario Cantone. He's best known, however, as Charlotte's gay friend, Anthony Marentino, on HBO's wildly popular series Sex and the City. On Broadway, he has appeared in Love! Valour! Compassion! and in the New York Shakespeare Festival's production of The Tempest, while his film credits include Mouse Hunt, Quiz Show and Crooked Lines. As a stand-up comedian, he has performed at Carnegie Hall and frequently appears at Caroline's in New York and Resorts in Atlantic City. His schedule this summer and fall includes further episodes of Sex and the City and back-to-back Broadway shows.

Jonathan Soroff: What's in your pockets right now? Empty them and give me an inventory.

Mario Cantone: You're going to be incredibly disappointed. I'm just sitting here with nothing...

JS: You're not wearing any pants?

MC: [Laughs.] No, I've got my black Diesel jeans on. Let's see: a Tiffany keychain that I got from doing a game show, my wallet, and my cellphone. That's it. I don't even have any cash.

JS: The Sex and the City phenomenon. Explain its popularity.

MC: The writing is really brilliant. Women relate to it. Gay men relate to it. And believe it or not, there are a lot of straight men who watch it, too.

JS: Which one of the women on the show would you sleep with?

MC: Kim [Cattrall], probably because she's one of my best friends. She's just totally cool and low maintenance. They're all beautiful, but Kim is the one I'm most comfortable with. We're very close, and we do so much together. We even went to Disney World together, to Mickey's Very Merry Christmas Party, in the pouring rain.

JS: My favorite thing about being a gay man is that if you date someone your size, you double your wardrobe. What's yours?

MC: [Laughs.] If you're a cultured, gay man, you've got good taste. But then again, you meet some gay guys these days and you're like, "Everything about you is straight, except for the fact that you sleep with men." They watch sports. They don't know how to dress. It's bizarre. The looks have blurred. You can't tell who's gay or straight anymore.

JS: Most annoying thing about gay culture?

MC: I hate a lot of the music and the clubs....I've never liked Madonna. I've never been to a Cher concert.

JS: How about show tunes?

MC: I like some. I love a good musical. And I love Judy Garland. There's the cliché. But you know what? She was awesome, the greatest entertainer in the world.

JS: Out of the stereotypically gay professions—wedding planner, florist, decorator, hair dresser—which would you be?

MC: I didn't get that gene. If it was up to me, my framed pictures would be on the floor, leaning up against the wall. In clothing, my taste is OK, but I don't even know if something matches. Wedding planner? I'd probably kill the mother of the bride. I couldn't do it. I'm retarded. I'm so bad at that stuff.

JS: Uh-oh, they might revoke your gay card.

MC: That's OK. Y'know, I've been doing stand-up for 25 years, and very little of it is about being gay, although I certainly allude to it in my act. But I'm a comedian first, and then I'm gay. I'm not a "gay comic." It's like a fat person doing nothing but fat jokes. It would be so tired.

JS: Would you ever do a nude scene?

MC: I'd have to shave my ass, but sure. I actually did it on Broadway. I replaced Nathan Lane in Love! Valour! Compassion! I came out in a little apron and heels with my ass hanging out. I'd do it now because I'm in the best shape I've ever been in.

JS: 'Cause you're vain. Here's another cliché: Like all gay men, you're a narcissist.

MC: Oh, yeah. And it's sad. I get looks from so many people in the city, but it's only because they recognize me. It's very upsetting when you realize it's not because they think you're cute.

JS: Piece of gossip you'd most like to read about yourself?

MC: Christ. My mother was a compulsive gambler. I'm gay, and I've been in a relationship for 12 years. So much of it is out on the table, I don't know what they could say.

JS: One actor you'd most like to do a love scene with?

MC: I guess LL Cool J.

JS: Random choice. So what's worse: bad shoes or bad breath?

MC: Bad breath. Bad shoes don't smell.

JS: You hosted a kids' show called Steampipe Alley*?!*

MC: Sounds like a porn movie, doesn't it? It wasn't my choice. I would've called it The Mario Cantone Show. But it was great. We were on for five and a half seasons. Sixty-two percent of our audience was adults. We showed cartoons and did sketch comedy and played games like Find Sammy Davis Jr.'s Eye in the Pie, and the Mommie Dearest Obstacle Course on Mother's Day. We got away with murder. Then Chris-Craft, the boat company, bought the station. They were unbelievably conservative, so not only did they pull us, but they reused the master tapes. They taped over all of them, so it can never come back to haunt me.

JS: Justin Timberlake—thumbs up or thumbs down?

MC: Thumbs sideways. You know why? He's a handsome kid, and very talented. He sounds like Michael Jackson. He dances like him. He does it incredibly well, but it's all unoriginal.

JS: Speaking of boy bands, what if you went to Toronto and married Joey Fatone from NSync? You could call yourself Mario Cantone-Fatone!

MC: [Laughs.] I know Joey Fatone, and love him. Great guy. Very funny.

JS: Worst gig ever?

MC: One of my worst gigs was at the Improv. It was late at night, and I was doing this bit about the Disney movie Bambi, and I said, "Do you know who the villain was? Man. Man killed Bambi's mother..." This girl goes running to the bathroom in tears and I was like, "What's the matter?" It turned out, the week before her mother had died in a car accident trying to avoid hitting a deer.

JS: You're a semi-regular on The View. Can't someone keep Star Jones away from the doughnuts?

MC: She lives her life. She enjoys her food, and she has a great passion for life...

JS: She's a hellacious bitch, isn't she?

MC: No. She's very nice. I've never had a problem with her. But the reason I'm on that show is Joy Behar...

JS: Speaking of whom—is she on antidepressants, or what?

MC: Jesus Christ, no! If she was, I don't think she'd be so cranky all the time!

JS: And that voice is like nails on a chalkboard. Would you ever go on a long car ride with her?

MC: I have been on a long car trip with her. I love her. She's hilariously funny, very talented, and one of those friends who always remembers where she came from.

JS: So is comedy a form of hostility, or a defense mechanism?

MC: Not for everybody, but for me, it comes from a lot of anger and upset and dismay and outrage.

JS: Favorite word to use in your stand-up act

MC: Whore.

JS: One word that best describes you?

MC: Whore.

JS: OK—last question: If your life were a Broadway musical, what would it be and why?

MC: Merrily We Roll Along, because it goes backwards and it was a big bomb. IB

[COMEDY], FOR ME, COMES FROM A LOT OF ANGER AND UPSET AND DISMAY AND OUTRAGE.

DJ Hazard

There may not be as many clubs as there were during the boom of the '80s, but today's comedy scene in Boston is no joke

BY EZRA DYER

In the beginning, there was the Ding Ho. It was the fall of 1979, and the Western-saloon-turned-Chinese-restaurant in Cambridge was looking for a way to fill the seats beneath the wagon-wheel chandeliers in its bar. A comedian named Lenny Clarke began hosting open-mike nights on Wednesdays, and another comedian, Barry Crimmins, recognized the potential of "the Ding" and proposed that its front room become a full-time comedy club.

"Barry Crimmins has to take credit for inventing the Ding Ho," says DJ Hazard, a Boston stand-up stalwart who became the Ding Ho house emcee a few weeks after Crimmins arrived. "He saw that Lenny Clarke's open mike was packed every Wednesday, and he went to the owner, Shune Lee, and said, 'Let me make this a comedy club.' To say that it took off from there would be the understatement of the century. The comedy boom of the '80s came along, and the Ding Ho was the place."

But, as with any bubble market, eventually there was a loud pop. "It was almost like clockwork," says Hazard. "New Year's Eve 1980, everything blossomed. New Year's Eve 1990, everything shriveled." The Ding Ho didn't even last that long; it was closed by the city in the mid-'80s.

Promoter and Comedy Connection owner Bill Blumenreich bought his club 14 years ago, which proved to be unfortunate timing. He originally intended to use Boston performers as headliners, but as comedy cooled off, he discovered he'd need to regularly bring in national acts to stay in business. The Comedy Connection is a survivor, but local comedians take the stage only Sunday through Wednesday, with the weekends reserved for national acts like Cedric the Entertainer, who commands $105,000 for a three-night booking. "It amazes me how good some of the local guys are, but they can't sell tickets," Blumenreich says. "People, when they go out, are buying fame. For example, I started touring nine or 10 years ago with Rosie O'Donnell. Rosie is funny but far from the funniest person I've seen in my life. But people wanted to see the person from the movies, the person who was rumored to be Madonna's lover. People think they're going to see funny, but they're going to see fame."

Why the sudden turnaround from the '80s, when the top Boston headliners could rake in six-figure incomes without leaving town? Blumenreich says that a drop-off in suburban customers seemed to coincide with the onset of the Big Dig. Hazard blames the comedy crash on club expansion that spread the talent too thin. The concentration of high-caliber performers in Boston fueled the popularity of stand-up, but the explosion of new venues resulted in a drastic decline in overall quality. "There became a glut," he says. "In the early days, there were only 15 comedians in Boston, but those 15 were Don Gavin, Steve Sweeney, Barry Crimmins, Steven Wright, Paula Poundstone, Lenny Clarke, Bobcat Goldthwaite....Then everything got diluted. The herd never got thinned. It was supersaturated with banality."

Since the late '70s, Boston has churned out a steady flow of talented comedians, many of whom are now some of America's favorite television and film personalities. The list is a long one, but here are a few who make us proud.

Leno

Mario Cantone

Perhaps best known for his role as Charlotte's prima donna friend Anthony Marentino on Sex and the City, cover boy Mario Cantone has his roots in Boston. Cantone has appeared in numerous Broadway productions, including Love! Valour! Compassion! and The Tempest. His television and film credits include Comedy Central's Premium Blend, the USO Comedy Tour and Comedy Central Presents ...Mario Cantone, as well as Chappelle's Show, The View and Mouse Hunt. Cantone frequently performs at Caroline's on Broadway and on the Atlantic City circuit and contributed to radio's scandalous (and now defunct) Opie & Anthony show.

Poehler

Leary

Lenny Clarke

A Bostonian through and through, Lenny Clarke hasn't strayed far from home. Many of his career highlights are Boston-related. The Ding Ho restaurant grad has appeared in a slew of television productions, including the early-'90s sitcom Lenny and Denis Leary's The Job, and in feature films such as Southie, Massholes, There's Something About Mary and Moonlight Mile. Comedy Central Presents...Lenny Clarke aired in 2002, and Clarke is currently a regular on WEEI Sports Radio (850 AM).

Rogan

Janeane Garofalo

America's reigning queen of cynicism is actually from Jersey, but after attending college in Providence, R.I., she moved to Beantown and met with limited success on the comedy circuit. Soon after, she moved to L.A., teamed up with Ben Stiller, and the rest is history. Her most notable credits include The Ben Stiller Show, an Emmy-nominated role on The Larry Sanders Show, her own HBO special, Saturday Night Live (1994-95), guest appearances on The Simpsons and Law & Order, and such feature films as Reality Bites, Romy and Michelle's High School Reunion, The Truth About Cats and Dogs, Clay Pigeons and Mystery Men.

Denis Leary

Worcester native and self-proclaimed "optimistic pessimist" Denis Leary began his comic career while studying at Emerson College, where he taught post-grad while making the rounds on the local stand-up circuit. He penned his breakthrough one-man show, No Cure for Cancer, while living in London in the early 1990s; the show was broadcast on Showtime and was released in book, album and video formats. His second television special, 1997's Lock 'n' Load, also aired to critical success. Leary's other credits include the films Wag the Dog and The Ref, the television series The Job, and guest spots on Comedy Central's Crank Yankers. He also has his own production company, Apostle.

Jay Leno

Andover, Mass., was the childhood home of this long-jawed, late-night star. The Emerson College grad got his start as a stand-up in local strip joints. Leno paid his dues on the comedy club circuit and first appeared on The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson in 1977. Ten years later he became Johnny's exclusive guest host, and in 1992 he officially began his now 11-year tenure as host of The Tonight Show with Jay Leno.

Conan O'Brien

NBC's brainy after-hours emcee graduated from Brookline High School and went on to Harvard, where he presided over the notorious humor rag The Harvard Lampoon. From there he moved on to Los Angeles. A writing gig for HBO led to subsequent work on Saturday Night Live and a writer/producer slot with The Simpsons. In 1993 O'Brien signed on as host of Late Night with Conan O'Brien. Nine seasons and four Writers Guild Awards later, Late Night continues five nights a week with repeats the following day on Comedy Central.

Amy Poehler

Burlington native and Boston College alum Amy Poehler graduated from a college improv troupe to Chicago's famed Second City and wrote and acted for three years on Comedy Central's Upright Citizens Brigade. In 2001, Poehler broke into the mainstream as a repertory player on Saturday Night Live, and she has appeared in the feature films Deuce Bigelow: Male Gigolo, Wet Hot American Summer and the forthcoming The Devil and Daniel Webster.

Joe Rogan

Hometown boy Joe Rogan broke into the Boston stand-up scene in the late '80s. He climbed into the public eye after being cast as dimwitted electrician Joe Garelli on NewsRadio and went on to produce a comedy album, I'm Gonna Be Dead Someday, and the video Joe Rogan: Live from the Belly of the Beast. The regular guest on radio's Howard Stern Show is the host of ABC-TV's Fear Factor and, as of Aug. 18, he and Doug Stanhope take over for Jimmy Kimmel and Adam Carolla as co-hosts of Comedy Central's The Man Show.

—Jessica Iredale

John Tobin and Jim McCue

"Ten years ago there were probably 20 or 30 comedy venues within 20 mile of Boston," says Blumenreich. "Now there's nothing left."

Compared with the heyday of comedy, that may seem true, but Boston stil produces more than its share of comedians who go on to national fame, and a new generation is emerging to find its place alongside the big names of the '80s. "There aren't as many venues as there used to be, but there's a whole new wave of Boston comedians who are kicking butt," says Hazard. "It's the late '90s, 21st-century crowd." The main spawning ground these days is, appropriately enough, a Chinese restaurant in Cambridge: the Comedy Studio at the Hong Kong in Harvard Square.

"The Hong Kong is where a lot of the new crop of comedians come from," says Eugene Mirman, who landed a spot on Late Night with Conan O'Brien after an audition at the Comedy Studio. Another Boston stand-up comedian, Brendon Small, was temping by day and doing stand-up by night when he was discovered by Loren Bouchard, producer of Dr. Katz, Professional Therapist, at the Comedy Studio in 1999. Small is now a writer, executive producer and voice actor (playing himself as an 8-year-old) on Home Movies, part of the Cartoon Network's Adult Swim lineup. The night Bouchard was in the audience, Small was doing a parody of an angry Boston comic. "I'd get up there and just scream about ham," he says. "I did a story about ham and got my own cartoon. That's my advice to people. Do that."

Another venue where Boston comedians can attract national attention is the annual Boston International Comedy and Movie Festival, founded in 2000 by comedian Jim McCue and Boston city councillor John Tobin. This year the festival ran for nine days in early May and featured 150 comedians. "We wanted to force the industry to come here and see the talent," says Tobin. "L.A. is the Mount Everest of comedy. But the major places are L.A., New York and Boston. If you can headline in Boston, you can headline anywhere." Local comedian Peter Dutton came in second at last year's competition and was signed by talent agency Brillstein-Gray as a result.

New comics still benefit from the comedy community that cemented Boston's national reputation in the '80s. For neophyte comedians, the level of competition in Boston can be daunting, but a Boston pedigree is a boon to any comic's resume. It certainly doesn't hurt that two of the major late-night TV hosts, Conan O'Brien and Jay Leno, are from the area. (O'Brien grew up in Brookline and was president of the Harvard Lampoon; Leno grew up in Andover and began doing stand-up at age 19 in strip clubs.) "Anywhere you go in the U.S. or Canada, you tell other comics that you're from Boston, and they shake their heads and say, 'What is it about Boston? Damn,'" says Arlington native Dane Cook, whose debut comedy album, Harmful If Swallowed, hits stores July 22. "The guys before you, the legends—Steve Sweeney, Don Gavin, Kevin Knox—those were the guys you had to follow every single night. My Dad said that if you play basketball with taller guys, you'll get better, and that's what it was like doing stand-up with them."

Besides raising the competitive bar, the veterans also offer practical advice to help up-and-comers hone their acts. "Kevin Knox was the greatest for me," says Cook. "He'd always try to find five minutes here and there to help me. He appreciated the fact that I wanted to learn."

Mirman also found Boston to be fertile ground for his developing act. "There were a lot of people who helped me," he says. "Tony V. was really great when I started in Boston. I didn't know anybody or anything, and he was established. I'd done comedy at Hampshire College in Amherst, but that was in a vacuum. Then I moved to Boston and there were more people with the same sensibility, or sense of humor."

DJ Hazard likens his relationship with new comedians to that of the "surf daddy" to the younger surfers in old movies—he may be older, but he can still climb on the board and show the kids a thing or two. "I really enjoy their work," he says. "When they're first starting out, I like to help. And they give me advice too."

But at some point, a young Boston comedian must make a tough career decision. Comedy is show business, and show business means New York and Los Angeles.

"Eventually you realize that you have to go to New York City to advance," says Cook, who moved first to New York, then Los Angeles. "You hit the ceiling. You say, 'I've got to leave to come back.'"

Mirman set his sights on New York as his career started to take off. "I moved to New York to 'make it,'" he says. "There's much more work here than in Boston, although Boston is a wonderful place. It was great to develop there. It was great to hide from the industry and figure stuff out. Boston has a really vibrant scene and comedy community—as opposed to New York, where you feel like you're in a frenzy."

After hooking up with the Dr. Katz crew, Small moved to Los Angeles, where he still performs stand-up when he's not working on Home Movies. "I moved out here because there are more opportunities for disappointment," he says. "I think eventually you have to move to New York or L.A., and L.A.'s cheaper. I came here pretty early in my career, but I moved out early so I could leave early."

The Holy Grail that awaits in Los Angeles is broader recognition, and that often comes in the form of a TV show. Comedians covet TV shows for the money, of course, but the exposure they get from a national show can be even more valuable. The Comedy Connection's Blumenreich points out that Ray Romano and Kevin James will never have trouble selling tickets to a stand-up performance, even though their material may not be as funny as Joe or Jane Nobody's. "When you're a stand-up, you're like a one-man show," says Small. "How do you get your name out there? It's a hard thing to do."

Sometimes, however, landing a TV show gives a comic a newfound appreciation for stand-up. Next fall, Worcester native Doug Stanhope will co-host The Man Show on Comedy Central with fellow comic Joe Rogan (who, years before encouraging hardy Fear Factor contestants to choke down raw ostrich eggs, first got behind the mike at Nick's

WHAT MAKES THE COMICS LAUGH?

We went straight to the funny-business experts to find out what makes them laugh. Below, six homegrown stand-ups tell us about their favorite comedians, books, movies and comedy albums.

Favorite contemporary comedians?

Ben Boime: Current headliners like Dane Cook, Kevin Knox and Paul Nardizzi.

Dane Cook: Patrice O'Neal, Robert Kelly. Harland Williams is a little more well known.

Eugene Mirman: Louis CK.

Dan Newbower: Louis CK, Sarah Silverman and Dane Cook. Watching these three live is a natural high for anyone who isn't a comedian. For me, they make me think I suck.

Robbie Printz: Bob Hope. Mark my words, that kid is going to be a star!

Favorite comedy albums or specials?

Ben Boime: Christina Aguilera's Stripped and the Mein Kampf book on tape.

Dane Cook: Bill Cosby Himself, Richard Pryor Live on the Sunset Strip and Eddie Murphy Raw or Delirious, but I would go with Raw.

Eugene Mirman: Emo Phillips' E=MO², all of Steve Martin's records and anything by Louis CK and Coyle & Sharpe.

Dan Newbower: Steven Wright's I Have a Pony defined my childhood. Bill Hicks' Relentless proved that stand-up can be serious. Genghis Kahn: Live from the Sunset Steppe helped shape my military strategy.

Robbie Printz: Eddie Murphy's Delirious was the first comedy album I ever bought. I listened to it over and over again and would drive people crazy quoting jokes and doing horrible impressions of Eddie Murphy doing impressions of Mr. T. I remember that album being so big that you could walk up to anybody and say "gooney goo goo," and they would know exactly what you were talking about.

Favorite funny movies?

Ben Boime: This Is Spinal Tap, Airplane! and the Zapruder film.

Dane Cook: Planes, Trains and Automobiles, Trading Places and Uncle Buck.

Eugene Mirman: Annie Hall or Better Off Dead or maybe Beverly Hills Cop.

Dan Newbower: I'm ashamed to say this, but of all the comedies put out over the last few years, the one that made me laugh the hardest was Black Knight. I have no idea why. None. On the floor, tears streaming down my face. Another real knee-slapper was The Hours.

Robbie Printz: Arthur is by far my favorite comedy movie. Hobson, the butler, turns being condescending into an art form. To this day whenever anybody asks me to do something, I reply (in a snobby Hobson manner), "Ah, it's what I live for sir."

Steve Sweeney: Amarcord by Federico Fellini, and I like Waking Ned Divine.

Favorite funny books or authors?

Ben Boime: I can't read. But I like the pictures in the IMPROPER.

Dane Cook: The Uncle John's Bathroom Reader collection (Bathroom Reader's Hysterical Society) and Stephen King. He can be really dark with his comedy. Of his books I like Dark Tower.

Eugene Mirman: Incidences by Daniil Kharms. It's a collection of absurd short things.

Dan Newbower: My parents bought me the David Sedaris CD box set, and I highly recommend it (thanks, mommy and daddy!). Much funnier when he reads his stuff aloud. Does that count as books? Because it was read from books. I can't read. (God it feels good to finally say that.) How about a funny TV show? Watch $40 a Day on the Food Network. It isn't supposed to be funny, but it is the funniest show on television.

Robbie Printz: John Irving's A Prayer for Owen Meany made me laugh out loud constantly. Every time Owen speaks it's in capital letters, so you're reading these really funny lines, and at the same time you're yelling to yourself. The book is hysterical and a great story.

Steve Sweeney: Joe Queenan's Red Lobster, White Trash and the Blue Lagoon: Joe Queenan's America. Very funny book. And David Sedaris' Naked.

Comedy Stop in 1988). The two comics have spent the past few months busily recording episodes, and Stanhope is candid in his opinion of TV stardom thus far: "It blows a lot," he says. "I've been working 14-hour days and living in the office. The legal department actually told me I had to leave. It's all worth it, though, because if the show sucks, it's me up there." Granted, Stanhope is not known for his cheery worldview (in his stand-up act, he proposes turning his bitter mother into a suicide bomber and sending her after the Yankees), but the thankless schedule of TV filming might've made Gandhi violent.

Besides the manic work hours, Stanhope is also adjusting to the influence of censors and editors, two entities that are largely foreign to the world of live stand-up. "Stand-up spoils you so much that way," he says. Stanhope is still learning what will and will not pass muster with the censors. For instance, he and Rogan created a takeoff on the old game show Make Me Laugh called Make Me Hard, which involved a transvestite stripper and a guy wearing sweatpants. The censors OK'd the bit (with some pixelization and minus the sweatpants) but made them change the name to Make Me Stiff. "So we can show a tranny giving this guy a lap dance, but we can't say the word 'hard,'" says Stanhope. "At the end of the day, no matter how good or bad the show is, you leave feeling kind of disappointed because it's censored and edited. It gives me a stutter that I don't have naturally."

Steve Sweeney, one of the Ding Ho originals and now host of the morning show on Boston's WZLX-FM, argues that the "move to Los Angeles and get a TV show" mind-set is overrated, if not misguided. "There are a lot of guys who stayed here and were successful. Kevin [Knox], Don [Gavin], Kenny Rogerson—TV doesn't mean anything. It takes a long time to learn how to do this, so by the time you do, you've got wrinkles and you're not the next new thing."

In the mid-'90s, DJ Hazard moved to Los Angeles for a year and returned with a similar opinion of the West Coast megalopolis. "L.A. is paradise, and everyone's miserable," he says. "There's this weight on everybody's shoulders. If I ran into someone I hadn't seen in a few months and they asked me how I'd been, I'd tell them that I was the new Ty-D-Bol man. They'd say 'Really?!' and actually get jealous."

Robbie Printz, the winner of the 2002 Boston International Comedy and Movie Festival, lives in New Hampshire and keeps a busy schedule performing around New England. "Are there as many clubs as there used to be? No. But there are still plenty of places to work," says Printz, who takes the stage at the Comedy Connection each Tuesday. "I've got 35 schools lined up for the fall. I'm still doing clubs. I like the mix; clubs, corporate functions and schools. I work five or six nights a week here. As far as a city where you can live and perform, Boston's great."

Judging by the roster of recent and upcoming shows, Boston's comedy scene may be in the midst of a turnaround. This summer, the Charles Hotel is bringing comedy to the Regattabar every other Tuesday with the Summer Comedy Series, and last March Lizard Lounge Comedy Hour host Kim Davis kicked of the inaugural Cambridge Fringe Fest, a six-night comedy festival that brought shows to venues like the Cantab Lounge and the All Asia Café. "Comedy has been blowing up lately," says Sophie Zunz, Charles Hotel director of PR and promotions. "Cambridge has a comedy history. It's edgy, young, smart. That's the philosophy of the series." The Summer Comedy Series brings DJ Hazard to the stage July 22, and Brendon Small makes a trip home August 19. "We're not a comedy venue, but it's something we'll look at doing every summer. We'll bring it back to get a younger crowd in the hotel," Zunz says.

Whether they set off for bigger cities or stay here to cultivate their fan base, Boston comics say they're happy to have the chance to perform and add their names to the city's comedy pantheon. "I can't think of a better job," says Printz. "Lottery winner, maybe."

"If I ended it right now," says Cook, "I can say I gave my best for stand-up comedy. I got to live and work in a community that's unlike any other. Comedy saved my life, and it gave me a life. If it was a person, I'd hug it. I'll always want to do stand-up comedy." iB

THE SMOKING-BAN CHRONICLES

A PERSONAL LOOK AT WHAT HAPPENS WHEN BARS AND CLUBS GO SMOKE-FREE

BY SUSAN ABBATTISTA ILLUSTRATIONS BY CAROLYN BOWES

Boston's citywide ban on workplace smoking took effect during this spring's seemingly endless stretch of cold, rainy days. For nonsmokers and employees who were delighted to be free of secondhand smoke, the ban was a bright, sunny day. For bar and nightclub owners, it was a storm that left behind a messy trail of new responsibilities—from cleaning up butts on the sidewalk to catching rule breakers and monitoring the behavior of groups gathered outside at the nicotine oasis. For diehard smokers, the ban put another cloud over one of their most enjoyed, and ingrained, habits. For me, a self-proclaimed "casual smoker," it was a fog through which I could see pieces of my own life emerging.

It's not an easy task to measure the smoking ban's social and economic consequences for the city. But for weeks, notepad in hand, I ducked in and out of bars to take mental snapshots of how things looked and how they had changed for bartenders, business owners, smokers and nonsmokers. What follows is my account of how individuals like these are responding to the smoking ban, and how it has affected them, and me.

MAY 4. It's the last night you can light up inside a bar or club in Boston. Last December the Boston Public Health Commission passed the Clean Air Works regulation, with strong support from Mayor Tom Menino. Here at Les Zygomates, a smoking-ban party is well under way. I'm enjoying a glass of red zinfandel at the bar, surrounded by smokers who have come to bid adieu to a beloved freedom. Just a few feet away, diners enjoy tonight's special menu: smoked chevre salad, smoked salmon, cherry-smoked pork chop. It is an amazing feast.

The guy standing next to me, a smoker named Steve, is clearly ticked off about the looming ban. "I feel like we're living in Iraq," the 43-year-old marketing executive says, spraying my face with a beer-infused mist. "There's no freedom, no personal choice! First the government is coming after your cigarettes; your french fries are next!"

My new friend and his cronies don't seem to mind that I'm scribbling notes for a story. But they do want to know what I think of the ban. I tell them I have mixed feelings. "After years of bumming cigarettes, I finally gave it up," I say. "That was two years ago. In the past few months, my nasty habit has crept back."

Steve pauses for a moment to put two and two together. "And now you're out covering the smoking ban. Hysterical," he says, grabbing his pack of Marlboro Lights from the bar. He flips the top: "Want one?"

It's not my first cigarette of the evening, and it's certainly not my last.

MAY 5: D-Day. At Kings, a bowling alley and bar on Dalton Street, Mayor Menino and Health Commission officials gather for a different kind of smoking-ban party, a celebration of "the most wonderful day for the city of Boston." I stand in a crowd of reporters. Although it's evening, my brain is still fuzzy from last night's party. And my lungs ache.

One by one, speakers step up to the podium and discuss the new law that will protect employees from secondhand smoke. "People should not have to choose between their job and their life," says one speaker, a restaurant manager who came to voice her support. To me, her statement makes perfect sense. The American Lung Association says secondhand smoke contains 43 chemicals that cause cancer. And you don't have to be a scientist to figure out that anything that smells so foul can't be very good for you.

Out on the street, the air is unseasonably cool. I zip up my sweatshirt and wander across Boylston Street. It's a Monday night, about 8 pm, and the Sox are away. I step inside the Pour House, my after-work hangout back in my 20s, and I'm surprised to see how innocuous the place looks without its old haze. Compared with the raucous Friday nights I recall, it's eerily quiet.

Tonight two people sitting at the corner of the bar are eating hamburgers and talking about the virtues of Krispy Kremes. Almost 20 years ago, I would sit in the same spot, drinking Sea Breezes and smoking with co-workers. I didn't want to become a full-time smoker, so I rarely bought cigarettes—but when I was out drinking, I wouldn't hesitate to ask complete strangers for them. Again and again.

I always believed my casual smoking was a passing habit, but it stuck. At night, as I put my smoky head on the pillow, I would chastise myself for being cavalier, for messing with my health, for inviting death. How could I be so stupid? Today those questions still lurch at me in the dark.

Outside again, I walk down to the Fenway area and duck inside the Baseball Tavern, a large bar on Boylston Street. On this night, nearly every stool is empty, and one of the few patrons—a middle-aged woman in a Harley-Davidson jacket—sits across from me, flicking her lighter and staring into the flame.

I tell Freddy, a 50-something bespectacled bartender and former smoker, that I'm here to "take the pulse" of the smoking ban. Freddy isn't too optimistic. He says it won't affect the Red Sox crowds, but it will definitely hurt business among his 30 or 40 regular customers, most of whom smoke. "Already, in a small way, it's showing its effect," Freddy says. "Some of my regulars aren't here right now. Those are the people who come in the winter, and we rely on them to help business during the off-season."

When the woman in the Harley jacket steps outside, lighter in hand, I follow.

MAY 16. I'm at the Milky Way Lounge & Lanes in Jamaica Plain, drinking a fancy fruity drink and hanging out with friends. The place is packed; loud conversations rise up over the music. As soon as I take the first sip of alcohol—and feel its warmth radiate from my belly to my limbs—I want to smoke. The urge is like a riptide. But submitting to that craving means committing an act of deception. My boyfriend, who is here in the crowd, still thinks I gave up the habit a long time ago.

The ban, I realize, makes the deception harder. No longer can I nonchalantly sneak a drag from a friend's cigarette. Now I must declare my intention to the bouncer, who brands me with a neon green "smoker's wristband."

In a roped-off area just outside the front door, two 20-something women are puffing on American Spirits. I ask for one, and stand with them, shivering in the rain. "Can you imagine having to smoke outside all winter long?" one of them asks me, her pierced bellybutton peeking out from a skimpy T-shirt. "If we have another winter like last year," she says, "it's going to be brutal." If I'm still smoking when it's snowing, I think, I'm in trouble.

As I head back downstairs, I can smell smoke on my hands and breath. There is no such thing as being a so-called casual smoker anymore. You're either outside with the smokers, or you're not.

JUNE 6. In a phone interview, Ian Just, chef and co-owner of Les Zygomates, describes how business has changed since the big party. "We had a lull at the bar when the ban first passed," he says. "I think the initial shock for some people was overwhelming." But Just considers himself lucky. "The bar business doesn't make me or break me," he says, explaining that people still come to dine and hear live jazz. "Smokers tend to drink a lot," he says. For places that rely on drink sales alone, the ban could be a bitter pill to swallow.

For Les Zygomates, the smoke-free atmosphere seems bittersweet. Although Just, who is a nonsmoker, enjoys the clean air, he says the ambiance can seem a bit too sterile. "When you come to hear live jazz," he says, "you kind of expect a sexy, smoky environment."

After I hang up with Just, I open a kitchen drawer and start rummaging through candles, recipes, assorted junk. I find a small slip of paper with a faded telephone number: the Massachusetts Smoker's Quitline. I dial, and within minutes I'm talking with a counselor. She patiently listens as I tell her of my smoke-when-I-drink habit, and she asks me how much and how often. My voice wavers as I tell her everything. It's the first time I've been honest about my smoking, even to myself.

Because I'm calling as an ordinary citizen and not as someone writing a story, I'm a bit surprised when she mentions the ban. "Maybe it will be good for you," she says, "because having to go outside will put an extra step between you and the cigarette." She also suggests that I avoid smoking "triggers," like drinking, for a while.

Before we hang up, she asks me when I plan to quit. I think about it for a second and tell her, with confidence, "sometime this summer."

JUNE 13. At ZuZu, in Central Square, on a Friday night, I hold a margarita in one hand and a Dunhill Light in the other. This week, Cambridge and Somerville passed their own smoking bans, which will kick in October 1.

I look at the ashtrays on each table and know that soon they will be a thing of the past, just as they are now in Boston. I stare at the people all around me who are laughing, drinking and smoking. That's another scene that will soon disappear as the ban makes its way across the state, whether city by city or as a sweeping statewide measure. A few weeks ago, the state Senate approved a statewide workplace smoking ban, and Massachusetts came one step closer to becoming the fifth state in the nation to have one. It's just a matter of time before all the necessary legislative parties agree to it.

On this night in Cambridge, with a future ban fast approaching, people seem to be savoring their right to smoke inside. Now that smoking is forbidden in Boston establishments, it's that much more seductive to pull up a stool, sip your drink and puff away. Of course, it's also one of the worst things you can do to yourself. In a bar, surrounded by music and laughter, it's hard to hear the internal voice that warns of the dangers of this habit. That voice tells me that soon this will have to stop if I want to live a long and healthy life. But now, more than ever, cigarettes are the forbidden poison fruit. At this moment, in a defiant act, I am taking a bite. iB

UP IN SMOKE

What became of Boston's ashtrays?

More than two months have passed since barflies and club-goers were forced to take it outside—smoking, that is—and everyone is slowly getting accustomed to the change. Inside the bar, that smoky haze has evaporated (no more airing out your coat and spraying your jeans with Febreze the day after going out), and the ashtrays have disappeared. Just where did all the ashtrays go? we wondered. Were they simply tossed into the dumpster? Stored in a basement? Donated to a rehab clinic? Here's what a survey of local nightspots revealed.

Cactus Club, 939 Boylston St., Boston (617-236-0200)
"The owners have been wanting to get rid of smoking for a while, so we'll probably smash them all up."
—Jennifer McGivern, manager

Felt, 533 Washington St., Boston (617-350-5555)
"Nothing. They're stored. We thought about putting them up on eBay to make up for the lost business. We hope someday the ban will be lifted and we can take them out so we won't have everyone outside the club instead of inside."
—Brian O'Donnell, managing partner

Jose McIntyre's, 160 Milk St., Boston (617-451-9460)
"We got a big glass-recycling bin and recycled them."
—Jamie Durham, manager

Kinsale, 2 Center Plaza, Boston (617-742-5577)
"We still use them because we have a patio. You can tell people we melted them down and made a statue—as long as you don't need a picture of it."
—Joshua Ganyeau, general manager

Lucky's Lounge, 355 Congress St., Boston (617-357-5825)
"We put them in storage and got oversize flowerpots filled with sand for smokers outside. I guess we can donate the little ones to Cambridge—for now."
—Bill Costa, general manager

Parris, Quincy Market Building, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston (617-248-9900)
"They're sitting in a box in a storeroom. Maybe we'll donate them to starving artists."
—Michael Carlisle, general manager

Porters Bar and Grill, 173 Portland St., Boston (617-742-7678)
"Some were given to staff, and some are waiting on a shelf hoping to be used again one day."
—Scott Nogueira, owner

The Rack, 24 Clinton St., Boston (617-725-1051)
"We're using them as appetizer plates for people who annoy us. Either that or as yarmulkes."
—Heather Michalowski, director of marketing

White Horse Tavern, 116 Brighton Ave., Allston (617-254-6633)
"They're actually all sitting in my office. We gave a few away to employees. I'm hoping we won't have to dust them off ever. The ban hasn't hurt business at all, so we're all very happy about it."
—Josh Shafer, manager

"HOW DO I love thee? LET ME COUNT THE MINUTES..."

BY JULIE SURATT

Two single Bostonians in search of love try speed-dating

How long does it take to figure out whether you click with someone? Can it happen in the first glance across a crowded bar? A chat in the grocery store checkout line? Or does it take months of waiting for the same bus every morning for sparks to fly? Clearly it depends on the setting, the people—in some cases, even the amount of alcohol imbibed—to determine whether the ingredients are right for a connection.

But what if you had to give it a number—in other words, how many minutes does it take to decide if you're interested enough in a person to follow up with a date? Wait, don't shrug off the question—it isn't rhetorical. We really want to know.

The inspiration for our question is the relatively new phenomenon in matchmaking called speed-dating. By now, most of us have heard of these singles events that pair men and women for a set amount of time—anywhere from one to 10 minutes—for brief conversation across a table. When the time is up, a buzzer sounds, and each man moves one chair to the left to meet the next woman. The concept has been around for about five years now in New York (it started with SpeedDating, which catered exclusively to a Jewish clientele), but it's moved up the coast within the past two years and has quickly become all the rage in Boston. Now there's one-minute dating, three-minute dating, five-minute, seven-, eight-...you get the picture. The premise is that you get to experience several dates in one night, while avoiding, as HurryDate puts it, "the agonizing four-hour blind date gone bad."

We looked high and low and found two participants willing to subject themselves to the trials of dating-by-the-minute. We asked them to attend three different events: three-minute dating sponsored by HurryDate, seven-minute dating with JJ Productions, and eight-minute dating with 8minuteDating.com. Join us for their journey...

meet...

Michelle Grdina. She's 30, a Somerville resident and Colby College grad who works at Harvard University. She enjoys traveling, hiking, listening to live music, attending sporting events and going on pub crawls. "I'm the type of person who likes to try everything once," says Grdina. Luckily for us, that includes speed-dating. "As a friend of mine always says, 'You just never know,'" adds Grdina.

meet...

Matt Curley. He's 30, lives in Brookline and, get this, ladies, is a doctor. He loves being outdoors, where he skis, mountain bikes, hikes and plays soccer whenever he can. "I've been waiting to meet the right woman in some spontaneous or magical way, but it just hasn't happened. I thought I'd be more proactive about it and see if speed dating led to anything."
